WIVES IN COURT HEAR BIGAMIST PLEAD GUILTY

Much Married Man Released On Bond Pending Sentence - Third Wife -Not Present.

Harry S McKay pleaded guilty to a charge of bigamy in District Judge Troup's court yesterday just as Chief Deputy County Attorney Coffey was about to begin the trial of his case.

Two of his former wives were in court when McKay stood before the period and heard Mr. Coffey read the information against him.

"To this charge what do you

"To this charge what do you plead, guilty or not guilty?" asked Judge Troup in the set legal phrase. "Guilty," said, McKay.

Pronounce Sentence March 1. "I will defer pronouncing sen-tence until March I and the defend-ant will be released under his forbond to appear in court then," said the judge.

McKay seemed very nervous Atter his plea of guilty was entered McKay went back to his seat in the court room while his attorney arranged for renewal of his bond. Asked what he had to say on the case, he replied: "Nothing."

Wives Ignore Him.

Not a word passed between Mc-Kay and the two former wives who were present. They sat together in a rear seat of the court room. Both their marriages have been legally annulled since McKay was arrested and charged with bigmy, November

McKay himself filed suit for di-vorce from Mrs. Edna M. Solberg McKay of St. Paul, Minn., on tech-

McKay of St. Paul, Minn., on technical grounds of desertion. This divorce was granted by District Judge Wakeley, January 21, 1920.

This young woman, who looks 25 years younger than McKay, was his legal wife. They were married in St. Paul, Minn., in September, 1915. She is tall, slender, rosy-cheeked, with a wealth of golden hair and a gentle, graceful manner. She was modishly dressed in a tailored suit

Third Wife Not Present.

The third wife, the one who declared last week that she would stick by him, was not present in court. She, before her marriage to McKay, which took place N vemis motherhood. But many women face the ordeal of Milledge. She worked for the Love-Hascall company in the Woodmen of the World building, where McKay also worked.

both still work there. It was her brother, Zura Milledge who filed the bigamy complaint. He said today that his sister, for a month after the charge was filed, was bitter against the man who had married her bigamously, but that she has changed. Last week she sat beside McKay in the court room of Judge Troup and seemed on the best of terms.

The penalty for bigamy is one to seven years in the state penitentiary. After a man has served The minimum, one year, it is within the power of the state pardon board to release him if his behavior has been good.

Dodge All Photographers. Photographers besieged the court touse this morning trying to take snap shots of the women in the case. The two former wives present stayed in a private office of the court house for two hours after the case was finished to avoid the pro-tographers.

Postponement of sentence was at the request of McKay's attorney, who asked that time in order that McKay may arrange his affairs before receiving sentence ..
