

SEA SCOUT CREW TO SAIL WATERS OF CARTER LAKE

Rotarians to Push One-Day Campaign for $35,000 for Boy Scouts of Omaha.

A part of the $35,000 which Rotarians expect to raise in a one-day drive next Thursday for Omaha Boy Scouts will be used for promoting a new department of sea scouting here.

G. M. Hoyt, Omaha Scout executive, said yesterday one "crew" of sea scouts, corresponding to a "patrol" of land scouts, already had been formed and that arrangements would be made during the summer for enrolling 30 boys, comprising four crews.

The crew already organized includes Mershopp Welch, Robert Benford, Louis Smetana, John Behmke, William Lee and George Borglum. William L. Hackett will be in charge of sea scouting training, with the title of "port master." He served six years in the United States navy.

At Boy Scout headquarters in the Patterson block yesterday preparations were being made to send out tomorrow hundreds of pledge cards, through which Omaha business men are expected to subscribe a large part of the $35,000 needed for 1920 scout expenses.

The campaign for funds will be pushed Thursday by telephone calls to business men, solicitation by scout officials and a special committee of Rotarians.

Rags Probable Cause of Schmolter Fire, Is Report

John C. Trouton, fire warden, reports that after a careful investigation of the origin of the recent fire at the Schmolter & Mueller building, he is convinced that there was no incendiary factor.

"The fire started in the basement," he said. "We were unable to trace any condition in the basement which might have caused the fire, except spontaneous combustion from oil-soaked rags used for polishing shoes. It is probable that these rags may have been left in a heap and that they may have become ignited from spontaneous combustion."

My Heart and My Husband

ADELE GARRISON'S New Phase of "Revelations of a Wife"

How Harriet Braithwaite Drew Attention From Madge.

Knowing Katherine's methodical nature I was not surprised to receive another letter from her upon Wednesday night, marked "special delivery." She had not named the hour of her arrival in the first letter, and as expected when I opened the envelope, I found that she had remedied the omission with her usual thoughtfulness.

"We shall be with you on the train reaching Marvin at 4:30 o'clock Thursday afternoon," was the brief note. "I could not tell at the time I wrote before just what train we could get. Lovingly, "KATHERINE."

"That's a short letter for a special," Dicky remarked idly, as I slipped the sheet of notepaper into the envelope again.

We were all gathered before the open fire in the living room. It was the first chilly evening we had had, and we were revelling in the comfort of the blazing logs. Katie had brought the letter and the book for my signature in such flamboyant fashion that the attention of everyone in the room was unconsciously fixed upon the missive.

I shot a quick furtive appeal at Harriet Braithwaite.

"Yes, isn't it?" I responded carelessly.

Before there was an chance either for me to volunteer an explanation concerning the letter or for any one else to comment upon it, Harriet crumpled the letter in the side of her chair, apparently in pain.

"Oh, Edwin!" she said faintly.

"He all sprang toward her, but I did not share the alarm of the others, for I had a shrewd suspicion that she was simply feigning pain in order to divert the attention of everyone from the letter which she must have guessed was from Katherine.

Instant Attention.

Her big husband was the first to reach her side.

"What is it, dear?" he asked with anxious tenderness. "The old pain again?" "Water, please!" He spoke over his shoulder with the authoritative brevity of a man accustomed to the military-like obedience of everybody under him.

Dicky had a glass filled with water at his elbow in record-breaking time. Dr. Braithwaite, one arm around his wife, had drawn a little vial from his pocket with the other hand.

"Open it," he said to me. "I did so, and from the vial he

Railway Holds Car Two Months Despite Shortage

In the face of an alleged acute shortage in the refrigerator car supply, the Great Western Railroad company has been holding such a car in Omaha since January 6, while it retains a consignment of cider which the consignee refused to accept, according to H. J. Schifferle of the Zinschler & Co. produce company, Eighth and Jones streets.

Mr. Schifferle says that he made the railroad company a cash offer of 20 cents a gallon for the cider in order to release the equipment for which shippers are said to be suffering in all sections of the country, but the railroad refused the offer and stated their intentions of holding the car until the stuff has been sold at retail for 35 cents a gallon.

Clerk Alleged Short In Accounts Promises to Pay

H. L. Mossman, assistant city attorney yesterday stated that George E.
