Yellow Is a Blithesome Color

By GERTRUDE BERESFORD.
Yellow is a blithesome color and is becoming to both blondes and brunettes. Georgette crepe in buttercup yellow contributes this effective dinner and theater frock, which is embroidered in yellow crystal beads run in squares. The blouse is simply made in short sleeve kimono lines that give just the background for the embroidery that needs no elaboration of drapery. A tunic of embroidered Georgette crepe hangs over an accordion pleated skirt of the fabric. This skirt is exceedingly graceful for dancing. It sways and swirls with every step, giving complete freedom of motion. The girle of this gown consists of three rows of ribbon—pink, blue and orchid—piped edged in gold. Worn with gold slippers and stockings this gown is very charming.

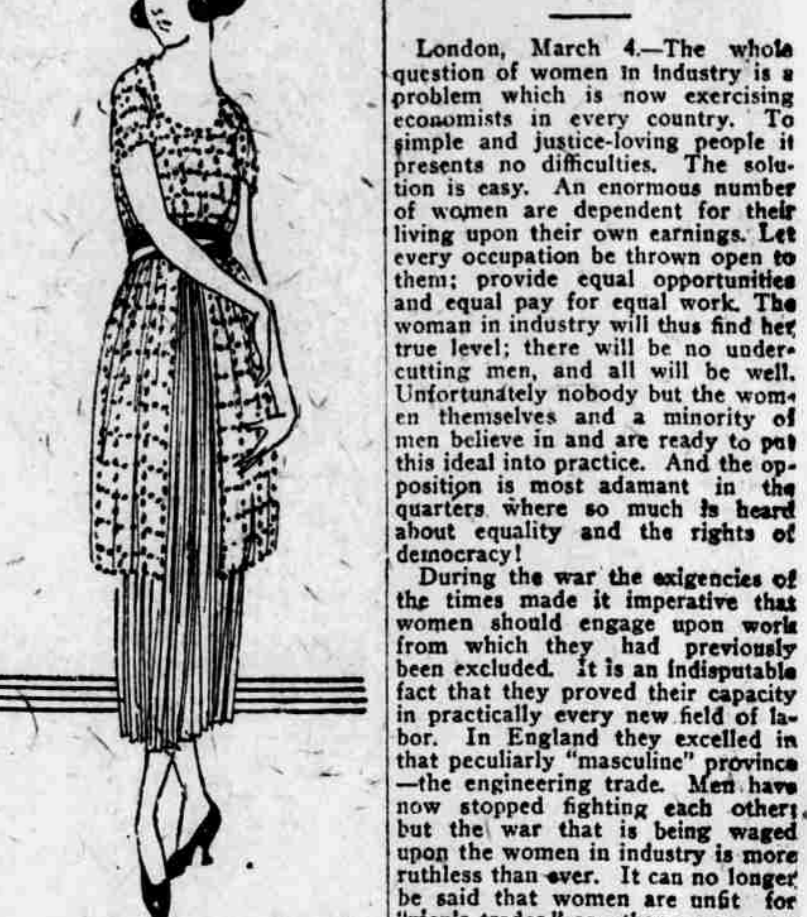

Wonder the boy is offended. Always speak to your acquaintances. Pay no attention to the joke in your High School Annual.

Mary—Your weight should be from 125 to 135 pounds. Matrimony and complications have nothing to do with each other. If you truly love a young man, and he returns your affection, marry him, whether he be blonde or brunette. Any kind of a ring will answer for an engagement. Pearl rings are sometimes chosen, though the diamond is most often used.

Pench and Pear—Such a category of questions as you ask. And just a little judgment on your part, would answer any of them. Don't use rouge, don't kiss boys at parties or anywhere else, don't be any less modest because it is leap year, don't think you have to be rude and rough in order to be attractive, don't go to dances or to any other place where you will have to keep late hours, don't think of marriage at your age—in short, try to develop a taste for the good life and clear your brain of boys, beauty and amusements.

Equal Payment For Equal Work In England

London, March 4.—The whole question of women in industry is a problem which is now exercising economists in every country. To simple and justice-loving people it presents no difficulties. The solution is easy. An enormous number of women are dependent for their living upon their own earnings. Let every occupation be thrown open to them; provide equal opportunities and equal pay for equal work. The woman in industry will thus find her true level; there will be no under-cutting men, and all will be well. Unfortunately nobody but the women themselves and a minority of men believe in and are ready to put this ideal into practice. And the opposition is most adamant in the quarters where so much is heard about equality and the rights of democracy!

During the war the exigencies of the times made it imperative that women should engage upon work from which they were previously excluded. It is an indisputable fact that they proved their capacity in practically every new field of labor. In England they excelled in that peculiarly "masculine" province—the engineering trade. Men have now stopped fighting each other but the war that is being waged upon the women in industry is more ruthless than ever. It can no longer be said that women are unfit for "men's trades," so other reasons are urged for their exclusion. There is not enough work to go-round, and the men must have all that is going. Or: the presence of women would be a danger to the solidarity of the position built up by labor. Organization coupled with equal pay for equal work would, of course, rule out of court the last contention. But certain big unions will not admit women at any price.

It was the Amalgamated Society of Engineers that more than any other body was so insistent upon the equal pay rule being enforced during the war. Indeed they entered into an informal alliance with the National Federation of Women Workers and undertook to assist and support the women's union in enforcing the demands jointly agreed upon. They also joined the women in a deputation to the minister of munitions in order to put before him certain specific proposals relating to payment.

It has now been unmistakably shown that the concern exhibited by this great union was prompted entirely by self-interest. At the recent conference of delegates, which meets but once in five years, it was decided by an enormous majority not to admit women to their union. Not all the pleadings and powerful arguments put forward by the representatives of women in favor of their admission, could move them to any other course. They thus accord to women workers the worst treatment that that which they have denounced in unmeasured terms when applied to themselves in former times. For by the pre-war practices act women have been turned out from light chemical work, glass work, aircraft work and kindred industries which were built up mainly through their efforts.

There are some unions that realize that it is in their own interests to organize and admit women on the same terms as men. But they would still relegate the women to inferior or semi-skilled work. The National Union of Railwaymen now accepts women members. The London Society of Compositors also takes women who are paid the same rates as men. The great Cotton Weaving union was built up from the beginning by women as well as men, and equal pay has always obtained in that trade.—Christian Science Monitor.

Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.
Dear Miss Fairfax, Omaha Bee: I am a young girl and am engaged to a man two years my senior. We are to be married early in April and for the past two or three weeks I have been having a terrible feeling. I am afraid of marriage and also afraid of life, for some reason I cannot get this feeling from me. I can't see any reason why I should be afraid, as the gentleman I am engaged to is wonderful to me, but for some reason I am just afraid of life, love and everything.

Now, Miss Fairfax, what can I do to bring myself to solve this problem certainly all to pieces. Hoping you will give me good advice, as you always do help others, yours,
BUBBLES.

I would judge you are accustomed to careful planning. You are now unable to think definitely of the future since there will be a great change for you which marriage brings. Because you can't visualize your future home and conduct, you are disturbed. I will all smooth out as you go. Don't try to live too much in the future. Live in the present. Make it strong and good and the future will be all right. Remember the story about the man who carried three packs. One contained the worries of the past, one the troubles he feared in the future, and the third, the cares of the present. Evidently your future pack is very heavy. My advice is to throw away the past pack, and your fiancé love each other, you have nothing to fear. With his help you will be able to bear whatever trials may come to your married life.

Will She Marry?
Dear Miss Fairfax, Omaha Bee: I am staying away from home or rather visiting some of my relatives. I am a fine old and have been going with a fine boy since I have been here, and I know he likes me and I like him. The other day he showed me a letter from some girl telling him how much she loved him, but she didn't sign her name. I never told him who I thought it was. But, Miss Fairfax, don't you think that it is some girl about 14 or 15 who wrote him? I think an older girl is more likely to be more than that. Was there any great harm in her doing this?
Miss Fairfax, do you think I am too old to go to college? I have no parents and so don't have a real home.

The young man of whom I spoke before wants me to marry him. He is a nice, clean boy and every one speaks well of him. His folks are well-to-do people. He stays at the same place where I see a great deal of him and know his ways, and the people where he sleeps speak well of him, and he doesn't smoke, he chews, and he doesn't spend his time at the pool halls. He has a good position, making $200 a month. He has a good education. He graduated from high school the same year I did, and he took a college course for a year and always stood good in the classes, as he showed me his cards. C. H.

Pay no attention to the letter. Only a silly, foolish girl could have written it. You must decide for yourself about marrying the young man. Think the question over seriously. You are young to marry, but the fact that you have no home might justify an earlier marriage than would be advisable otherwise.

Mothers Are Right.
Dear Miss Fairfax, Omaha Bee: We are two girls, 16 and 17 years of age, whom every body considers very beautiful. I am a blonde and my friend is a brunette. We are very tall and stately. Like most girls, we are coming to you for advice.

We have beautiful long hair, but our mothers insist that we wear it in curls. Now, Miss Fairfax, do you think that is right? Why can't we do it up like most girls of our age, instead of wearing it like a couple of little girls?

There are a couple of young men in our town whom we have fallen in love with, but our parents have forbidden us to go with them. They say their habits are immoral, but we have seen nothing bad about them. We love them very much and think they return our love. Don't you
