

SOVIET RUSSIA WINS PLACE IN WORLD AFFAIRS

Bolsheviks Gain Military Control of Country With Exception of New States.

By COL. HENRY J. REILLY.

Examination of the situation as it exists today shows:

1. That the bolsheviks have complete military control of all of old Russia with the exception of the new states created along its western border.

2. That the bolsheviks possess a fairly large, constantly growing, fairly well equipped, well trained, and well led army which is now available for use either in the west against Europe or in central Asia against Great Britain's dependencies.

3. That the belt of small states between the Baltic and the Black sea have not sufficient strength individually or collectively to resist the threatened blow.

4. Great Britain, in spite of tremendously increased military responsibilities on land and in spite of a rapidly diminishing army, proposes to rely upon voluntary enlistment to raise a new army and that she therefore is not and will not be in condition to face an immediate military crisis.

5. That France is well prepared and proposes to continue to be well prepared.

No Stopping the Bolsheviki. It is therefore doubtful if the armed force necessary to defeat the bolshevik army, should it attack, is in existence.

If it is not in existence, can it be produced in the present state of public opinion in the different countries?

Each of the small states stretching from the Baltic to the Black sea has a socialist party more or less strong and opposed to fighting the bolsheviks. In addition, some of them have watched with alarm the success of the monarchist party in the recent Hungarian elections, as they fear that a crowned head in Hungary will only be the first step to one in Austria and then one in Berlin. Some of these states have already started making peace with the bolsheviks.

Policy of French Republic. The French policy is directed against the bolsheviks because they do not desire the spread of their doctrine.

They also fear ultimate German commercial, financial and political control of Russia, in an enlarged and strengthened Germany whom they could not resist.

For these reasons they are opposed to treating with the bolsheviks and equally opposed to any policy which would purchase German help against the bolshevik menace. The revision of the terms of the treaty of Versailles. These terms are designed to so weaken Germany and to keep her so weak that she never can again be a menace to France.

Opinion in Great Britain. In Great Britain at the present schools of thought. The first of these is apparently that the British agrees with the French point of view. It advocates facing the problem squarely and fairly by making sufficient military preparations to meet any attempt at invasion by the bolsheviks with sufficient force to defeat them. It calls the attention of the public to a marked similarity between the conditions existing today and those which existed in 1914 and the years just prior to the beginning of the war.

The same desire to reduce armaments to get rid of war and the same tendency of political leaders to avoid frank statements as to foreign policies were prevalent then as now. During those years the party opposed to making war on the continent was so strong that such military preparations as were made for the recent war had to be disguised.

Must Fight for Empire. Today the labor party by its bitter opposition to a military policy based on facts prevents the steps being taken which the defense of the existing empire demands.

It is pointed out that if the British overseas empire is to be maintained it will have to be fought in the future and probably in the near future, as in the past.

There is one essential difference, however; the days of small armies and small expeditionary forces are past. War today between nations means whole people in arms.

There is a second school which, like the first, regards bolshevism as a dangerous enemy, but which, unwilling to make the military preparations necessary to meet squarely the issue, proposes to get the needed additional strength by a policy of close co-operation with Germany. Mr. Churchill is commonly accepted as one of the leaders of this school.

Would Make Peace with Reds. There is a third school which advocates making peace with the bolsheviks, thinking thereby to remove that danger. By building up trade relations they hope to profit by buying raw material cheaply instead of at high prices in America, to sell their own goods, and also to prevent German exploitation of Russia.

Mr. Lloyd George is commonly considered to be the leader of this school. He also is reported to have encouraged, and still to be encouraging, the making of peace with the bolsheviks by the small states along the Russian border from the Baltic to the Black sea.
