U. S. MUST HAVE OWN OPERA, LAST DE KOVEN WORD. Will Not Be Much More Intelligible Than Those Sung in Foreign Languages. Chicago, March 14.—A warning was issued to operagoers by Reginald de Koven, composer of "Rip Van Winkle," shortly before he died not to expect that the new American opera will be intelligible in its entirety. The advice of the noted composer is of peculiar interest just now. "Don't get the idea that because an opera is sung in English you're going to understand every word of the text, because you're not," said Mr. De Koven. "You'll be lucky if you get half of it. Even Italians, listening to opera in their own language, say 60 per cent is about all they can understand of what is sung. "The pronunciation of words in singing is necessarily different from the conversational pronunciation, and that applies to English as well as French and Italian. But we believe the English vernacular can be made to serve the purpose of opera as artistically and as satisfactorily as any language." Mr. De Koven, who made his world premiere at the Auditorium here with the presentation of his opera "Rip Van Winkle," predicted that the native art, born just before the world war, will have a flourishing career.

My HEART and My HUSBAND

By ADELE GARRISON. How Madge Faced Jack Bickett at Last. It was not until the last day of the visit Jack and Katherine were making us that I found, or rather made, the opportunity to talk to Jack concerning his attitude toward his wife. They were with us over a week, and during this time I watched my brother-cousin carefully and gathered a very good idea of the thing which I was persuaded was sapping Katherine's happiness. It was not anything deliberate. I acquited Jack of that early in the week. It was simply a habit of speech and action which had insensibly grown upon him until I knew that he, himself, had no realization of the suffering he was causing the wife who loved him so devotedly, and with such utter sacrifice of self to his welfare. That this icy gruffness had its origin in the unhappy jealous obsession concerning Dr. Braithwaite which Jack had cherished even before their marriage I knew. Rooted in his own suffering, no less real to him because utterly unfounded, the habit had so attached its parasitic tendrils to his nature that when its original cause, jealousy of the big physician, had been removed by Harriet Braithwaite's interview with him he had been unable to make other reparation than his apology to Dr. Braithwaite. To Katherine he simply had been a "little kinder," and I was sure that, blinded to the suffering he had caused her, he had offered her no heart-cleansing plea for forgiveness, such as was due the royal heart of her.

At THE THEATERS

SAM MORTON, head of the house of Mortons, playing at the Orpheum this week, stated yesterday at the opening that it is not safe to serve ice cream in bricks at an Irish banquet. This was one of the witticisms which he offered during a breezy dialogue with his wife, Kitty. This season Mr. and Mrs. Morton are accompanied by their youngest children, Martha and Joe, who are clever. The dancing, singing and patter of the family are of the kind that is appreciated. Sam is remarkably nimble and Mrs. Morton retains her vivacity. The older twin sang "Down by the Murrumbidgee Brooklet," one of their song numbers of the long ago. Lyons and Yosco scored a big hit with their harp and guitar and their five exclusive vocal numbers. Florence Tempest, accompanied by Alton and Allen, dancers, and George Harris at the piano, was a favorite with her artistic costume act, "Tumble in Love." Homer B. Mason and Marguerite Keeler have a new act, "Married," by Porter Emerson Browne. The action is lively and witty. Mortimer McKee and Gertrude Clegg have found something original in the art of cycling. A new series of Topics of the Day is offered on the screen and kinograms offer another interesting screen feature.

Financial

The New York Times. Chicago Tribune-Omaha Bee Leased Wire. New York, March 14.—The stimulating effect of last week's developments in the financial markets was all the more pronounced because of the uncertainty and rather gloomy forboding which had existed since the year began. Of domestic moment, the supreme court's decision on stock dividends stood in the foreground as an influence to increase speculation in securities. This, however, was of less real value, as far as fundamental matters of industry and credit were concerned, than other events. The fact that the highest court declared dividends paid in stock were free from income tax gave the way for corporations with swelled surplus accounts to distribute to stock owners certificates of participation in surplus and in the corporation's business. Such dividends will not add anything to production, nor will they add to a corporation's credit facilities. As well. Theoretically, the issuing companies could have paid as large cash dividends from income tax as they have for corporations with swelled surplus accounts. The increased shares after stock dividends are not a new thing, but the fact that they are being actively at work. The cables were bringing news that the supreme council at London, dealing with after-war reparation, was devoting serious attention to the question of Germany in getting back on her industrial feet. Also the country was informed by a British government spokesman that the Anglo-French loan, falling due next October, would be paid off and that preparations were already being forwarded to that end. When the history of the international money market is reviewed for its influence upon financial thought. In the great decline of sterling, which established the quotation of $1.10 on February 4, speculation which considered special things unduly supplied much force. At the same time, it is probable that the depression test the international obligation could not be met without recourse to fresh borrowing in this country helped shape the position of bankers in regard to the exchanges. Or if bankers did not stress the possibility of a heavy demand upon American credit, they were fearful of the dumping of securities upon the American market from British and French sources as the sellers accumulated balances in London to a degree which would organize security values. But from the present viewpoint the maturity of the loan is to be met in a careful and normal fashion. Securities undoubtedly will be disposed of here by the market as rapidly as possible and to make up whatever difference there may be between the amount of the loan to be retired they will send gold. At this time it is not necessary. Nor will the position of the market be improved by the fact that the amount of the loan will be soon or not until the due date approaches. It has been enough that the surety of

High Prices Being Felt

The effect of abnormally high prices in coming into evidence in some of the primary markets. The general level of commodity prices on March 14 was lower than a month ago. A single month does not tell enough to the basis of calculations, but parts of the country did report declines of certain goods which have been reported in some quarters that a persistent fashion. Hides and other, some textiles, a number of foodstuffs and pig iron are less firm than six weeks ago. The domestic demand continues on a vast scale and consumers are not likely to be put into a panic to find a reason for gradually receding prices. Ship sailing to European ports are reported lightly loaded and it is expected that the February import figures will disclose an increased flow of foreign products. These items are suggestive of stable European exchange rates and that the demand for domestic products is hardly open to estimate as yet.
