An appeal is being made to interest Omaha women in the work that is being done by the Big Sisters. The Woman's Service League, recently donated the use of two rooms in the old Hillman home, 2403 St. Marys avenue, to be used as a recreation center by these girls. Up to the present time the Big Sisters have been unable to take advantage of this offer, owing to the need of chaperones. Any woman who has the time and is interested in this work may call at the Big Sisters' headquarters at 523 Bee building or telephone Douglas 6592, for further information. Miss Gladys Shamp, extension secretary is in charge during the mornings and Miss Francis Ellis in the afternoons. Beginning Thursday, the office will be opened from 10 a. m. to 5 p. m. Books and magazines are also needed and may be sent to the office in the Bee building.

Lending a helping hand to little sisters in the business world is the object of this organization. "We are very anxious to increase our membership, both active and associate," said Miss Grace Rowland, vice president of the Big Sisters. Only business women are eligible to active memberships, but any woman interested in the organization may become an associate member.

My HEART and My HUSBAND

By ADELE GARRISON

What Madge "Got" from Robert Savarin's Letter.

The sight of Robert Savarin's handwriting upon the letter Dicky tossed to me had a curious effect upon me. The lonely artist had been so much in my thoughts since my chance encounter with Harry Underwood that this tangible message from him seemed almost like an answer to my own sub-conscious thoughts. It was as if I had withdrawn from my own volition, psychically transferred to the man who loved Lillian so faithfully the message that she had need of him.

I withdrew the letter from its envelope slowly, strangely reluctant to read it, even though I wished nothing more than to know its contents. But I could not help wondering whether this letter of Robert Savarin's, coming so closely upon the heels of my meeting with Harry Underwood, might not spell unrest and perplexity for Lillian.

There was no use postponing the reading, however, especially with Dicky's admonition to haste still ringing in my ears. I knew that his whim for the moment was the tennis game he had proposed, and that he would be as sulky as a spoiled child deprived of a toy if I should delay my dressing unduly. Therefore I spread out the heavy sheet of paper—breathing the good taste of the artist who kept himself so aloof from the centres of civilization—and read the short missive he had penned to my husband.

"My dear Graham," the letter began. "I have been ill and out of things again so long—the little word 'again' made me sorrowful with the pitiful remembrance of the wasted years when Robert Savarin had first been 'out of things' by his poor, crazed brain—that it is an effort for me to write even to so tried and true a friend as you. But it is necessary for me again to get in touch with my old world."

"I have been doing some work since I have partially recovered my strength, that to my partial eyes seems worth sending to the dealers. But I am actually afraid of my own judgment, so I am going to ask a great favor of you. Will you allow me to send or to bring you some things, and give me your unbiased opinion of them? I know how busy you are, how much a tax upon your good nature such a request will be, but—there are many reasons why I must get back into the old routine again, and I am, therefore, presuming upon the old assurance you once gave me, that if ever I needed you I had only to call upon you."

"Please recall me to the remembrance of Mrs. Graham. I have so many pleasant memories of her kindness to me. I trust that both of you and your small son are well. Yours very sincerely,

"ROBERT SAVARIN."

Dicky's Frank Comment. Even with the fear of Dicky's displeasure upon me I re-read the letter before changing to the short skirt, middie blouse and tennis shoes which I always wear for my tennis games. I was trying the shoes when Dicky came in, having rushed like mad in the two minutes left to me after the letter.

"What d'ye think of the dear old boy's letter?" Dicky asked, and I relaxed my hurry, for I saw that, man-like, having succeeded in making me rush my head off to get to play, he was now willing to wait and discuss the letter for any number of minutes.

"I think he wants to come down to see us, and doesn't quite like to say so," I replied promptly. "So you got it, too," Dicky smiled indulgently. "He's almost like a child hunting for a toy, isn't he with that sentence, 'Will you allow me to send or bring some things?' Of course, we must write and invite him to make us a good, long visit. I can tell you I'm tremendously flattered to think the old boy wants me to pass judgment on his pictures. Gee, think of me telling a master like Savarin whether or not his things are all right or not! Shows he's not up to snuff yet or he'd never pull a bone like that."

The Invitation Planned. There was genuine sincerity in his tone, for Dicky, even though egotistical enough in many ways, is always curiously humble where the masters of his craft are concerned. And he has always had a special sort of acolyte attitude toward Robert Savarin.

"I don't call it a bone at all," I said indignantly. "He has been ill, and no doubt is uncertain about his own judgment. And I don't know where in the wide world he could get a better judge than you."

Dicky laughed teasingly. "My, what a blind, loyal spouse!" he laughed, but I knew by his tone that he was not displeased by my little outburst. "With the art world in general shared your opinion. We'd be top hole, old dear, instead of comfortable joggers along the middle of the road. But how about this invitation—will you write it, or shall I?"

"Suppose we both write to him," I suggested.

"You do have glimmers of common sense sometimes," Dicky gibed.

And so it was arranged.

Paris is French Again. "Paris is remarkably free of Americans," says Miss Harriett Taylor, who has just returned from 19 months' service as chief of all the work of the American Y. W. C. A. in France, to resume her work with that organization at its national headquarters in New York City. "The uniformed hordes of Americans who thronged Paris streets during the war and up to the last few months have departed. The thousands on thousands of tourists who may be expected after a few more months have not yet begun to arrive. Between them Paris is more French than usual."

This does not mean that there are no Americans there. The American Women's club, the new Y. W. C. A. club which is coming to be a general rendezvous for all Americans in Paris, is exceedingly well patronized even now. But many of the women who meet there for clubs and parties are residents in Paris, not tourists. When the anticipated influx of American tourists begins this club house (formerly the Hotel Petrograd, at 33 Rue Caumartin) will be full to overflowing.

French Club. The French club will meet Thursday at the home of Mrs. A. D. Chapman to sew for the Child Saving institute.

Tea at Fort Omaha. Mrs. Jacob Wuest entertained at a St. Patrick's day tea at the Wuest quarters at Fort Omaha Wednesday.

Tuesday Musical Notes.

To know "Casey at the Bat" is part of one's education, all will agree. Those who have failed to hear it on the dramatic stage will have an opportunity Thursday evening to hear it on the operatic when John Quine, baritone, will present the number in his program before the Tuesday Musical club at Brandeis theater. He will sing also "Requiem," which was originally scheduled on De Gogorza's program. Sidney Homer, husband of Madame Louise Homer, is the composer of both these selections. Madame Louise and daughter, now en tour, are among the attractions offered the Tuesday Musical club for next season.

Boxes engaged for the Thursday evening performance include reservations by Mr. and Mrs. R. B. Howell, Mrs. Walter Silver for the Amateur Musical club.

Long-Miller.

The marriage of Ivy Helen Margaret Miller, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles M. Miller, and Eugene H. Long took place Monday afternoon at the Kountze Memorial church. Rev. O. D. Baltzly officiated. Miss Myrtle Miller and W. B. Comstock were the only attendants. Mr. and Mrs. Long will reside in Lincoln after April 1.

Church Affairs.

The Woman's Foreign Missionary society of the Pearl Methodist church entertained at a mothers' and daughters' banquet at the church Tuesday evening. The members of the Queen Esther and the Standard Bearers societies were the guests. Covers were placed for 100.

Miss Sue Fitzgerald has the distinction of being the only woman hide buyer in Chicago.
