How An Enviably Color And Complexion May Be Obtained.

At a summer camp in the mountains last year there was a young woman whose color and complexion were the envy and admiration of every one. She never appeared until about 10 o'clock, when the other campers, after a leisurely breakfast and half an hour or so spent in waiting for the mail, had gathered to receive it on the steps of the lodge where they ate and danced together. Then this girl of the lovely complexion would appear, radiant, enthusiastic, fresh-dressed for tennis, golf, tramp and boating.

The secret of her freshness lay in an egg and an orange. Instead of eating breakfast in the usual way she ate an egg soft boiled over a spirit lamp and the juice of an orange. She ate this meagre but sustaining breakfast in her room and so was not tempted by the hot breads and cakes, muffins and meat dishes which were served in the camp dining room. Hence her lovely complexion. Moreover, she saved much time. She could eat her breakfast slowly in 10 minutes, and she could eat it without dressing. Then she had an hour or so undisturbed in which she could write letters, mend, sew or do anything else which needed daily attention. By 10 o'clock, freshly dressed for the day's sport, she would make an appearance.

The other girls, who had, perhaps, overate at breakfast to their complexion's harm, had wasted an hour or so daily waiting about for the mail. Their mending and letter writing were an ever unfinished task and burden to them. And more than that they had gained little from their early morning chat and idling. The camp never really woke up until the middle of the morning. The talk at breakfast and just after it was not inspiring.
