GIRLS! DRAW A MOIST CLOTH THROUGH HAIR

Let "Danderine" save your hair and double its beauty.

Oh, girls, such an abundance of thick, heavy, invigorated hair; a perfect mass of wavy, silky hair, gloriously fluffy, bright and so easy to manage.

Just moisten a cloth with a little "Danderine" and carefully draw it through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; this magically removes all dirt, excess oil and grease, but your hair is not left brittle, dry, straggly or faded, but charmingly soft, with glossy, golden gleams and tender lights. The youthful glints, tints and color are again in your hair.

"Danderine" is a tonic-beautifier. Besides doubling the beauty of the hair at once, it checks dandruff and stops falling hair. Get delightful Danderine for a few cents at any drug store or toilet counter and use it as a dressing and invigorator as told on bottle.

LONG LIST OF SYMPTOMS

North Carolina Lady Was Nervous, Weak and Suffered Greatly, But Relief Soon Came After She Took Cardui.

Asheville, N. C.—Mrs. J. A. Slader, of 45 Woodrow Avenue, this city, recently made the following statement:

"I was in a very run-down condition after . . . I wasn't able to go.

"I was nervous, weak and couldn't do my work.

"I felt like, at times, no matter what happened, I couldn't get up a spark of interest.

"I was depressed, blue, and continually on the lookout for something to happen.

"I couldn't sleep to do any good, and had to force myself to eat when meal time came.

"I suffered some pain in my back and sides, but the worst trouble was weakness and depression.

"I decided to try a tonic.

"My sister had gotten such fine results from Cardui, I began using it.

"Soon I noticed I would get hungry and sleep at night, and this, I thought, was a great help. I became less nervous.

In every respect health, thanks to the druggist, about it.

My HEART and My HUSBAND

By ADELE GARRISON

What Mrs. Durkee Explained to Madge.

I spent an extremely bad quarter of an hour with little Mrs. Durkee in the interval between arriving at her home in response to Alfred's frantic call and the coming of Dr. Gibson.

She evidently was in great pain, and moaned continually. I endeavored to allay the pain by putting hot fomentations on her foot and ankle and resting them against the electric foot warmer, one of the many conveniences which Alfred's thoughtfulness had provided for his mother. But although I am sure they mitigated her suffering somewhat, the changing of the hot wet cloths seemed to annoy her so much that I soon desisted, contenting myself with a final swathing of her foot in hot, dry flannel.

Curiously enough, her foot, painful though it was, appeared to have secondary place in her mind. Her first concern was the routine of her household tasks, which she feared would be interrupted by her accident. My little neighbor is the most domestic of women, and she makes her household a fetish in the manner known only to the women of the older generation.

"Oh, Madge! Whatever shall I do?" she exclaimed, punctuating the words with moans as the throbs of pain in her foot and ankle racked her. "I'm just in the middle of putting up my tomatoes and pears and making jelly. Suppose I've broken my leg or something—everything will spoil!"

"Suppose you don't cross the bridge until you have to?" I returned lightly and banally. "You may have only a painful sprain which will yield readily to treatment, and in any case you have jellies and canned stuff enough in your fruit cellar now to feed two families."

The Doctor Arrives.

"No such thing!" she retorted. "You haven't the slightest idea of Alf's capacity for his mother's preserves and jellies. And I wanted to put up an extra lot this year. I suppose there's no way out but that Alf'll be married before another year, and I don't want him to miss the things he's used to."

Her tone was subtly full of disparagement of Alfred's gentle, loving fiancée. I felt a sudden hot desire to defend Leila.

"Indeed, I think you'll find Leila is a pretty capable little girl," I said. "Don't you remember that strawberry?"

"Oh, she can do a few things!" she said loftily. "But as for buckling down and doing a whole fall's preserving of the things Alfred likes—well, you've got another guess. Oh! Will that doctor ever come? He's just got to give me something to quiet this pain. And I'll just tell you right now, I won't have any trained nurse bossing me around, no matter if I have both legs broken."

My little neighbor's idea of a physician has always appeared to me to be a hazy mixture of a respectful mental, and a divinely inspired prophet. She expects miracles of healing from the practitioners who minister to her. She also demands that they humor her wishes, no matter how fantastic or how opposed to their prescribed course of treatment. Those of us who know and love her best always anticipate a hectic time when she is ill.

Dr. Gibson, however, is not a martinet in the sick room, with an exaggerated idea of his own importance, but a genial, delightful man, who humors his patients as much as possible, reserving his firmness for the times when it is necessary for him to exercise it, then no one can be more adamant than he. Alfred has always said that Dr. Gibson understands his mother's vagaries better than any other living being, and it was with genuine relief that we heard his car come tearing into the driveway.

A Faint Protest.

"Well, little lady! What new mischief have you been up to now?"

The physician's greeting held a note of provocative raillery which made my little neighbor smile and dimple coquettishly. It would be a graver emergency than a possible fracture, much greater pain than he was suffering to banish the coquetry from little Mrs. Durkee's interview with any good-looking man.

"Why, doctor!" she protested. "I didn't do a thing but go downstairs to look at some fruit I had canned."

I woke up in the night and got to wondering whether I had forgotten to turn them upside down, and so I—

"Turned a somersault herself on the stairs, doctor," Alfred interrupted. "This is the first I've heard of the reason for her going downstairs, but here are two reasons for her falling."

He held out the offending high-heeled slippers at arms' length. Dr. Gibson glanced at them smilingly. "Treat them respectfully," he urged. "They are a struggling physician's best friend, good for a healthy bill at any time."

Little Mrs. Durkee giggled at the pleasantry, a giggle which twisted involuntarily into a moan of pain. Dr. Gibson looked at her keenly.

"Now if you'll be the brave little woman I know you can be for just a few seconds," he said, "we'll find out just what's the matter here."

Hoover Suction Sweeper

The air suction of the Hoover lifts the carpet from the floor, bringing the fabric into contact with a motor-driven brush having two spiral rows of soft hair bristles. Revolving brush insures thorough sweeping and beating. And the air suction lets none of the dirt or lint get back into the carpet.

Quality Milk Producers' Notice

DURING ALL the years of the development and progress of our Dairy and during the entire time of the World War, we have never lost sight of the fact that the delivering of safe milk to thousands of homes is a moral obligation and a serious one.

We are constantly in the market for milk and cream from producers who will follow strict rules of production. We are continually insisting on a high-grade quality of sweet milk and cream produced under sanitary conditions, which not only complies with the Dairy Ordinances and Regulations, but which meets our ideas of inspection also. We have always found that there is an unlimited demand for milk of this quality.

Occasionally it becomes necessary to refuse certain supplies of milk from some Dairy Farmers who are unwilling to comply with these quality regulations.

With the above facts in mind, any or all producers of milk in Nebraska who desire to be patrons of this Dairy will forward their own interests by corresponding with us.
