

INDIAN AGAINST SUDENBERG NEXT MONDAY AT FORT

George Lamson, Chief of Omaha Tribe, to Box Local Middleweight Ten Rounds.

George Lamson, Indian heavyweight of Walthill, Neb., and Johnny Sudenberg are promising to make for it at Fort Omaha next Monday night when they clash in a 10-round boxing bout, under the auspices of Fort Omaha athletic committee.

According to his manager, Lamson is known among his tribal brothers as "Straight-Standing Elk" and is all that his Indian name implies. He stands 5 feet 11 inches in his stocking feet and weighs 186 pounds.

Chief Lamson learned to box while stationed at Camp Cody and when he got to France he fought 18 bouts without defeat, one draw, five victories by referee's decision and 12 knockouts.

He entered the A. E. championship tournament as a light heavyweight. He won the championship in his division, knocked out contenders from two other divisions and went into the finals for the A. E. F. title.

When the final contests were to come off, Lamson weighed in at 179, too heavy for the class and was barred from competition.

On his return to Walthill he took up boxing in earnest. Kid Graves became his manager. Last week Jack Fitzgerald went up to Walthill to instruct the big Indian.

Few Omahans have ever seen Lamson. Johnny Lee saw him one night in the ring for a few minutes. When the Indian saw Johnny he knocked the Omahan down three times and out once in two rounds. Joe Stangl took the Indian on and lost one round.

TIM HENRDY had a complete set of ptomaine poisoning. Tim grabbed a sad oyster in New Orleans. There is nothing sadder than a sad oyster. In justice to the olive planters, we will state that this oyster was not an olive. People have been soured by ripe olives, but not on the half shell. Somebody must have dropped one of the oysters in the Red Sox bat bags. They haven't been swatting enough to wake up the baby key on an adding machine. The Giants have improved slightly in their batting, but not enough to make Al Mauer-Ellas beg, borrow or steal a new lead pencil in the order named. Maybe it's the other way round. Us New York cops never consider a pal innocent until he is proven guilty.

With rain leading off in the batting order, base ball bats way down next to the pitcher. Next in line are Sartorial doings and waivers.

It is not likely that McGraw will check any players until the lower berthers join the upper berthers in Rocky Mount, N. C. Barrow has a cluster of semi-pro pitchers who are only smeared with third-class postage and haven't a chance of reaching Boston with Burlington sorting out the mail. It looks as if Barrow will soon be in a position to make trades that will stagger the second division.

This is the third game smeared by rain. If business is as bad last year as it was this time next year, we'll be blank blanked, that's what you hope.

Larry Doyle stands up at the old home dish with one eye squinted tighter than an rusty Yale lock. Larry's batting shows he has recovered, the eye that he keeps shut.

Those April showers bring May bloomers.

The terrific snoring in the old (Penzance) has been traced to Pirate Klem. Bill's snoring keeps the engineer awake.

Tommy Murphy, who was Pittsburgh Phil's winning jockey, writes from Texas that the wells are drying up, due to the lack of rain.

The flying armadillos have requested that fire escapes be placed on all the upper berths.

Pat Flaherty, who was fouted as a new phenom, turned out to be much newer than Barrow suspected. He will pitch this summer where they use hay forks for bats.

Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Fletcher are two different guys on and off the ball terrace. On the ball field Fletcher corresponds to the guy who rode behind the Caesars, warning them that emperors were but mortal. Off the field he gets chummy with the Umps enough to borrow their cigarettes.

The little town of Greenville, Miss., kicked in with four thousand dollars admissions. Another four thousand make Brannick feel at home by crashing the gate.

Burman Shades Hutchinson.

Philadelphia, April 6.—Joe Burman, Chicago, had a shade the better of his six-round bout with Hughie Hutchinson, Philadelphia, here Monday night.
