My HEART and My HUSBAND

By ADELE GARRISON

The Way Dr. Pettit Endeavored to Make Amends.

With my fingers clenched into my palms to still the tremulous excitement my pride would not permit me to betray, I stared at the winding road ahead of me along which Dr. Pettit was sending his car at a rate that I knew spelled danger for anyone but the most experienced of drivers.

I did not dare to look at him, but I was psychically sure that his face held the same set, sadder anger that had darkened it when we had started away for the second time from the Ticer farm with the mocking laughter of Harry Underwood ringing in our ears.

I knew that not only was he astounded and revolted at the sight of Harry Underwood upon apparently friendly terms with me, but that a fiercer, more primitive anger was shaking him at the sudden reappearance of the man he so hated.

The enmity between the two men had been no secret in the old days; neither had taken any pains to hide it, and I knew that this sudden reappearance of the mocking adventurer whom the young physician believed to be the incarnation of everything evil was swaying him with an emotion that was finding only a small outlet in the wild pace at which he was hurling his car along the road.

Undisguisedly frightened I was. But I knew just enough of driving to realize that any word or gesture which would take his attention from the fraction of a second from the wheel which he was subconsciously guiding with unusual skill might precipitate the very accident I dreaded. So I held myself rigidly silent, waiting until the dark frenzy which swayed the young physician should have somewhat abated.

It was not until we neared the broader road leading into Southampton that I noticed the car begin to slacken its pace. Soon it was traveling at its usual rate, fast enough in all conscience, for I had already observed that Dr. Pettit was no laggard in arriving at any destination for which he was aiming, and I began to wonder what would be the first words which would come to his lips.

"I cannot have heard aright back there at the Ticer farm," he began at last, and his tone and words were the acme of icy contempt. "Surely, the man with whom you were chatting upon such apparently friendly terms could not be the unspeakable wretch who tried to compass your husband's death that time on the flying field."

"And who later saved Dicky's life very nearly at the cost of his own," I retorted crisply. "Yes, that was Mr. Underwood."

Now I had no brief for Harry Underwood, even though Dicky long ago forgave him, and I know would take him back into the old comradeship if he only knew he was in America again. Indeed, my own feelings were colored with the same aversion as Dr. Pettit's before the hour when the harum-scarum adventurer put to flight the man, Jake Wilsey, who was frightening me. And even though, because of that, and of Lillian's quixotic feeling toward the man whose name she bears, I feel impelled to treat him with ordinary courtesy whenever I meet him, yet I can never wholly smother the revulsion against his smooth, debonair wickedness which invariably seizes me at the sight of him.

But there was something about Dr. Pettit's tone and manner which aroused every bit of combativeness in me. I have felt the same militant spirit before when my opinions and the physician's clashed. There is such an air of finality, of absolute rightness about his utterances, especially when his wrath or disapproval is aroused, that I find it impossible to keep from controverting them.

He was silent for a moment at my retort, then he spoke again a bit thickly.

"May I ask if your husband shares your approval of this—this—?" I knew that he was nearly beside himself with anger, but nothing could excuse the words which trailed off chokingly into a muttered imprecation.

I heard the sharp intake of his breath, as if he had been struck a physical blow, then for a long minute there was no sound but the humming of the motor. Then he spoke, and there was infinite sadness and meekness in his voice.

"I am an abysmal brute, of course, and if I plead the justification of my agony of spirit when anything evil comes near you I should only add to my offense. But will you not grant me the mercy your tender spirit gives others and absolve me from the punishment your request would be to—?"

He was so humble, so terribly in earnest, that I felt my anger die. And I could not afford to be ungracious when I was even then enjoying the courtesy I had asked of him in the morning. But though I rescinded my resolution, and during the time that remained before my train started eastward I tried my best to second his very palpable efforts to put our conversation upon the light, friendly basis with which we had started the trip, yet the shadow of the incident hung over us, and I think he was no less relieved than I was when he put me aboard the train.

"Forgive me," he whispered, as he grasped my hand tightly in parting.

"and do not forget I would die to serve you." But the melodramatic words did not touch me. I reflected grimly as I took my seat that it would be more comfortable for me if he were not quite so intense in his friendship.

How to Keep Baby Smiling and Well

See that the daily functions are regular and normal

YOU can't expect the little ones to be happy and playful when the head feels dull and the stomach bloated. The normal habit of children is to be happy and when you notice them cross and fretful you will usually find constipation is responsible.

of being without a bottle in the house for the emergency arises almost daily when it is needed.

Perhaps they have missed that daily function so necessary to comfort and health. Look at the tongue and see if the breath is bad. Watch for belching. These are the tell-tale symptoms of constipation. Tonight give a little of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, which you can buy at any drug store, and it will act in the morning and the troublesome symptoms promptly disappear.

Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is a combination of simple laxative herbs with pepsin. Unlike the harsher physics it acts gently and without gripping so that while grownups can use it freely it can also be given to a tiny baby with perfect safety. Thousands of American families would not think

In spite of the fact that Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is the largest selling liquid laxative in the world, there being over 6 million bottles sold each year, many who need its benefits have not yet used it. If you have not, send your name and address for a free trial bottle to Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 511 Washington St., Monticello, Illinois.

"Like a Mighty Army Moves The Church of God"

Thirty divisions of that army—thirty denominations—are moving forward in a nationwide cooperative campaign.

THE army that stands still is really retreating. The Master's command was a forward command, "Go ye into all the World."

Out of the war the churches emerged with a new sense of the urgency of that command.

"We must move forward all along the line," they said, and each denomination planned its own "Forward Movement" to deepen the spiritual life of its members and equip itself with money and power.

Then came the greater thought, "It is not enough for us to go forward. We must be sure that there is no duplication of effort; that cooperation prevails; that every man and dollar does its utmost in service.

"We must go forward together."

So the Interchurch World Movement was formed—a clearing house through which thirty denominations without sacrificing their identity in any way—can cooperate in the service of Jesus Christ.

FOR MORE than a year trained experts have been at work making a scientific survey of the whole world, and of America county by county.

The churches, for the first time in their history, have the full facts.

They know where America is overchurched and where underchurched.

They know exactly how they can cooperate in the foreign mission fields to produce the largest results in international education, international health and international good-will.

No business man can study that survey without being impressed by the accuracy and courage with which the task has been approached.

ON THE basis of the survey, the cooperating denominations will unite in a simultaneous financial campaign in the week of April 25th. The amounts asked for are large in the aggregate; they are small when divided among the church members of the nation—smaller still when you count the whole number of men and women who love America.

The average contribution to the church today is less than three cents per member per day. Think of it. Yet if each person who loves and believes in America will increase his contribution by only a few dollars, the whole amount will be easily subscribed.

Will you do your share for a better America and a better world? Your chance to help is coming in the week of April 25th.
