"Gymkhama" to Be Given
By Junior League
In June.

At the special meeting of the Junior League at the Blackstone Wednesday morning, plans were completed for an affair to be given by the league here. Members decided on a "Gymkhama," that is, a stunt program, to be given in June at one of the country clubs. All arrangements are not yet completed, but according to Erna Reed, president of the organization, the league girls are enthusiastic over the idea. Mrs. Paul Gallagher is in charge of the publicity for this event. Members also pledged themselves to serve in the May Time lunch room for the week.

Jensen-Smith.
The marriage of Miss Delia Rosetta Smith, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles E. Smith, and Philip Jensen of this city took place Wednesday evening at the Smith home. Rev. Howard Whitcomb officiated. The bride was gowned in white and carried bride's roses. There were no attendants. The couple will be at home after April 15 at 2016 Lake street.

Raynor-May.
The marriage of Miss Mary Clare May, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles E. Smith, and Walter V. Raynor of this city, and Mrs. W. J. Raynor of Conneaut, O., took place Wednesday morning at St. Annes church. The attendants were Miss Gertrude May, sister of the bride, and Fred Raynor, brother of the groom. Breakfast for the immediate relatives was served at the home of the bride.

After a western trip, Mr. and Mrs. Raynor will reside in Omaha. Among the guests were the parents of the groom and his brother, Louis, of Conneaut.

Entertains at Luncheon.
Mrs. Ford E. Hovey entertained at a luncheon of 40 covers at the Fontenelle Wednesday, Easter, lilies formed the decorations and Easter cards marked the places.

My HEART and My HUSBAND
By ADELE GARRISON

The Surprise Robert Savarin Brought With Him.

There were but few people in the train, so that when I had recovered my poise after Dr. Pettit's disconcerting farewell, I selected a rear seat where I was sure of being safe from observation. There, camouflaging the answers I had jotted down from Mrs. Ticer's dictation in the pages of the magazine Dr. Pettit's courtesies had provided for me, I pored over them carefully until I was certain that I had memorized them perfectly. It was but the work of a few seconds to tear the paper into tiny pieces and to scatter them unobtrusively from the open window by which I was reading.

Assured that the task was safely completed, I resorted to the habit I have carefully cultivated for years, and thrust the whole affair of the questions concerning Jake Wiley into a tiny compartment of my brain and turned the key in the lock. Then I buried myself in the magazine Dr. Pettit had bought for me, a favorite publication of mine. I knew that I had done all that Lillian had asked for me and I guessed that the information Mrs. Ticer had given me would be welcome to my friend. There was no use wasting time or worry upon either the man or the Stockbridge case, with which he was connected.

But the problem of Lillian herself was another matter. Her face with the lines of suffering so far faintly etched upon its composed mask, but palpably growing deeper, haunted me. I had noticed recently that she was thinner than she had ever been, and her eyes were beginning to lose something of the indomitable spirit which had always looked out from them. From numberless little stray instances I was sure that one constant haunting terror beset her, the obsessing fear of Harry Underwood's re-entrance into the life he had made such long-drawn-out misery for her.

What Madge Wondered.
A fiery zealot in her patriotism, her husband's bravery in the service had wiped out for her all resentment for her own wrongs, or for the man's former crimes against his country. I had known of her Quixotic determination to crush her own happiness and that of Robert Savarin, because of Harry Underwood's real or fancied need of her, at the time she made it. I guessed that in following it out she had sent Robert Savarin away from her, as soon as he sufficiently recovered from the terrible illness—incurred for his search for Harry Underwood—to be able to accompany his sister, Mrs. Cosgrove, to their mountain home.

And now Harry Underwood had come back, and I alone, of all his old circle, held the knowledge of his return. The glimpse I had caught of Lillian's anguished terror when she suspected for a fleeting moment that she had seen him, her relief when she decided that she had made a mistake, were fresh in my memory. They had decided me to keep the conditional promise I had made Harry Underwood to let his presence in America remain a secret for a time. I wondered a little fearfully if Robert Savarin in his lonely mountain home had physically felt the menacing presence of Harry Underwood near the lady of his heart, and if this subconscious influence were back of his proposed visit to us. The next instant I had laughed at myself with prosaic scorn at my own folly, assuring myself that Robert Savarin had reasons enough for his trip in his desire to see Lillian and arrange for the sale of his pictures, without my impugning a touch of the occult to his journey.

Dicky Observes.
That Lillian for the first time in her life doubted her own strength of renunciation I knew from her words and manner when I first told her of Robert Savarin's projected visit. As I remembered the whiteness of her lips and her anguished eyes, I renewed the vow I had made that if I could compass it, Robert Savarin should have another chance to plead his case with her. He has always seemed to me to need an advocate, this gentle recluse, with 15 years of mental blankness behind him, and his apparently hopeless love for Lillian completely filling his heart and brain.

But it was a new Robert Savarin whom I met a few days later, when Dicky, after telephoning from the city that the artist had arrived, brought him out on the train which reaches Marvin a half-hour before our dinner time.
"What d'ye know about the old dear?" Dicky demanded of me, when after he had ushered the artist into our home with the air of reverential admiration he always employs toward the man he regards as a master, he had conducted him to his room to rest for a little before dinner. "Isn't he the chipper old party, though? I hardly knew him when he stepped from the train, he swung off like a 2-year-old. Old Lil would better look out. She's always looked a lot younger than he, but if he keeps on at this rate people'll take them for mother and son."

I laughed at his nonsense, as he

Practical Service To Children by Day Nursery

For the 23 days in March when the day nursery was open, 188 children were cared for, according to Mrs. William Archibald Smith, chairman of the nursery, National League for Women's Service. One child requiring an operation was taken to the hospital, where surgical attention was secured without fee to the mother. Another child is under the observation of a prominent oculist, whose services were given without charge. Dr. Kathleen Sullivan O'Connor visits the nursery, giving her services without fee to the children. Dr. Edwards of the city health department inspected the nursery in March.
Mrs. F. S. Westbrook, head of the National League Motor corps, reports 10 patients taken to dispensaries in March for the Society for the Relief of the Disabled by the following members of the motor corps: Mrs. Glen Wharton, Mrs. John F. Murphy, Mrs. O. S. Goodrich, Mrs. Frank Best, Mrs. B. H. Smith, Mrs. C. Swanson and the Misses Marion Weller and Goldie Pried.

had intended I should, but I watched Robert Savarin unobtrusively when I next saw him, and my observation confirmed Dicky's. Something had changed him from a gentle invalid, crushed by Lillian's coldness, to a forceful man, looking 15 years younger than when I had last seen him.
I felt with a sudden rush of relief that I would not have to arrange opportunities for Robert Savarin. He looked fully capable of fighting his own battles "to advance his lady's cause."

106 Years Old, 3rd Set of Teeth

The Oldest Man in Georgia Has Used Thedford's Black-Draught as Long as His Daughter Can Remember, For Deranged Stomach and Liver Troubles.

Attapulcus, Ga., Jan. 30, 1920.

MY FATHER was born Feb. 5, 1813, making him 106 years of age. He was a confederate soldier, fighting all through the Civil War. He also fought in the Indian War. His father and a man named Sharp settled this county. My father was born in this county and has never been away except to the war. When the Indians fought the Whites here, my father was cut on the head by an Indian, carrying now two big scars across his head.
My father has his third set of teeth, and can still get around the yard in good weather. He had splendid health, till he began cutting this third set of teeth. While cutting these teeth I had to use with him a mild laxative, and I have never found anything better than Black-Draught. This I have used with him ever since I can remember. When I was a child my father used Black-Draught, on up to now. That is what I use with him. I can recommend Black-Draught and gladly do so. It was my father's family medicine and I suppose it will be till he dies, as it is reliable, and I have never found anything that did him the same good when his stomach is deranged. For old people, Black-Draught will help the liver acting.

(MISS) ELLA STRICKLAND.

IMPORTANT! There is only one genuine Black-Draught Liver Medicine, but many imitations and substitutes. Do not be deceived! Look for the name on the package! Refuse all imitations!

Thedford's Black-Draught

L. A. 8

Lafayette Strickland, of Decatur County, (the old gentleman in the center of the picture) is believed to be the oldest man in Georgia. His exact age was not known until a few days ago, when his daughter came across the old family Bible, which had been mislaid. The record in the old volume gave the date of her father's birth as 1813. Some of the oldest men in his county say they recall that, when they were boys, Mr. Strickland was a gray-bearded man.—Bainbridge, Ga., Post.
