

PERSHING DAY--- NEXT TUESDAY

¶ Two human forces rule the world---logic and sentiment---men's heads and men's hearts.

¶ Either without the other is incomplete and results in half-service to mankind. Cold reason fails to sense the soul of the people; sentiment alone rushes headlong to disaster.

¶ Day after tomorrow Nebraska makes her choice of republican candidates for the presidential nomination. Republican voters are to indorse as their candidate the man whom they think best fitted to attempt unmeasured tasks of national reconstruction, problems whose solution is already too long delayed, which must be settled in the next four years.

¶ Who is that man to be?

¶ Sentiment says: John J. Pershing, Nebraskans' fellow-citizen.

¶ Logic says: John J. Pershing, tried and proven, an able and true public servant.

¶ The heart of Nebraska cannot but turn to Pershing on this day of great opportunity. From service in the Phillipines, in Mexico, in Europe, Pershing has turned back repeatedly to Nebraska---his home: In forty-seven states of this country and in every foreign land his name has been linked with "Nebraska".

¶ The reason of Nebraska pondering the words and deeds of all candidates, turns also to Pershing on this day of decisive action.

¶ Pershing knows how to work with other men, whether they be his subordinates or his equals. He proved that in France, in the Phillipines, in his career in this country. In Europe he headed an organization that not only delivered the death blow to the country's enemy on the fighting line, but that conceived and carried out projects of engineering, merchandising and commerce of a magnitude unparalleled in history. Co-operation---executive genius---did the job.

¶ Pershing knows Europe and Asia. He has served his country in both. He has touched elbows with the great men of the world and he has not been caught in their net of diplomacy. They yielded to him, not he to them.

¶ Pershing believes in America and stands up for it. He did that when he insisted on creating an American army in France, under American command, on an American front.

¶ Pershing is the man who the people of Nebraska would like to honor. Pershing is also the man who, on sheer merit, deserves to be honored.

¶ Pershing-of-Nebraska is the man whom Nebraska republicans should vote for on next Tuesday, April 20th.
