Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.
A. T. A. O.—Some names for your club: Edco Nous (French for among ourselves); Good Times club; Merry-makers; or you could use any of the Greek letters such as Beta Omicron Alpha for B. O. A. (best of all), or some such combination. If you wish to be democratic in name use something like "Community club." The ideals your club stands for ought to be expressed in your name. If you are organized just for fun, then something like "Good Times" club for example would be appropriate. Progressive high five is the regular game, except that you change tables every four hands (or at any stated times), the couple with the highest score moving up toward table No. 1, and changing partners when they have moved. The two losers remain where they are. You should keep tally, or score, and at the end of the evening determine who are winners. Prizes may be given if you like. If any in your club object to cards, play Rook, which is quite similar to high five.

S. W. A. K.—When you pass the candy, offer it to the young man first. It is all right to invite a young man to dinner. Where he sits depends upon who the others are at the table. You will have to use tact in letting a young man know when it is time to go home. If it is late when you reach home, you should not invite a young man in. Say good night at the door, explaining that it is so late he will probably not care to come in. If your sister goes with some one you dislike, the thing for you to do is to be courteous and do not interfere with her affairs. Breaking dates is a dishonorable practice. Usually friends return each other's pictures when they quit going together as girl and beau. Going to church with a boy is no sign you are engaged. If it were, our churches would have increased attendance. The color of skirt you wear on a stage depends on the kind of entertainment you are attending. If you cannot keep a date, you can inform the young man in any convenient way.

Hungry for Etiquette: You know that I heartily disapprove of kissing games and kissing. It is very polite to help a girl put on her coat, rubbers and spats. When turning a corner or crossing a street, if you must change to be on the outside of the walk, simply step behind the girl and move to the other side.

B. S. and P. S.—Give more thought to your spelling and less to foolish questions and you will be better off.

Mac.—You say you are engaged to one man and in love with another who is not worthy of your respect. It all looks to me like a complicated and unpleasant affair. You should break your engagement if you do not care for your fiance. But do not marry the other man if he is not up to light and worthy. Let matters go for a year or more and perhaps you will develop a mind of your own and can see things in the right way.

Clubdom

The mere matter of a club convention will not keep women from voting. Delegates to the Fourth district convention of the Nebraska Federation of Women's clubs, meeting today at David City, who are unable to vote before leaving their homes, are voting by mail. Mrs. J. B. LaChapelle of Ashland and Mrs. Warren Perry of Fairbury are among those who so exercised their right of franchise. Seventy delegates were in attendance at the convention when it opened Tuesday afternoon. Officers who were registered included Mrs. John Slaker of Hastings, state president; Mrs. J. B. LaChapelle, Ashland; Mrs. Warren Perry, Fairbury, district president; Mrs. F. H. Hole, Fairbury, district secretary; Mrs. F. J. Ayers, David City, district treasurer. The David City Boy Scouts escorted the ladies to their stopping places and the spacious homes of David City have been thrown open to the visitors.

Elect Officers.
Mrs. H. J. Bailey was re-elected leader of the political and social science department of the Omaha Women's club at a meeting Monday afternoon in the Y. W. C. A. Mrs. W. H. Warwick, secretary and treasurer, will continue in her office for another term. The assistant leaders will be appointed by Mrs. Bailey. Following the business session, Lysle Abbott spoke on the new state constitution.

Will Attend Convention.
Mrs. M. D. Cameron and Miss Katherine Worley are planning to attend the 17th annual convention of the First district, N. F. W. C., which will be held in Nebraska City May 4-5.

My HEART and My HUSBAND

By ADELE GARRISON

How Lillian Laid Her Plans.

I saw Alice Holcombe start, and her eyes mirror a look of fear as Lillian drawled out the various phases of the man who had called himself John Hambridge, and told her that Kenneth Stockbridge had confessed to the murder of his wife. "Has he been?" Alice Holcombe asked.

Lillian answered her eyes rather than her words.

"He can do no more harm," she said promptly. "I have that here," she tapped her forehead grimly, "that will turn Mr. Bridgman—Hambridge—Wiley into the most whimsical yellow cur that ever begged for mercy. But I've got to get hold of him first, and that is where you can help me."

Again Alice Holcombe looked at her steadily.

"I am ready for anything," she said.

"It won't be much of a task," Lillian replied reassuringly. "You'll simply have to play a waiting game for a few days, and be always ready to leave anything at a moment's notice and come to us at Marvin."

She relaxed into a comfortable attitude with her hands loosely clasped on the table in front of her—a pose which told me that Lillian had attained the main object of her expedition, and that all the rest was merely a matter of detail, and said:

Lillian's Plan.

"You see, it's a cinch, lead pipe, that he will make one more attempt to frighten out of you girls what he thinks you know. I'm practically certain that without the knowledge of those telephone conversations so damning to Mr. Stockbridge, of which Midge alone knows the truth, they will be unable to connect up their case—of course, they would be of incalculable value to the prosecution, notwithstanding. So it will be our little job to see that they don't get them. And when I get through with Mr. Jake Wiley I hope that our own stock of information will be materially increased."

"I haven't the slightest idea, of course, which one of you he will tackle first," Lillian went on speculatively after a minute's pause, "but if he tries to see you, Miss Holcombe, please register all the shrinking panic you can assume."

"I shan't have to assume anything," Alice Holcombe retorted grimly, in that first flash of her old manner I had seen. "The panic will be perfectly real. I can assure you, but I'll do anything you say."

"The more realistic the better," Lillian said. "Do or say anything you please, but get him over to our place upon the pretext of your wishing to see Midge, and let us know in some way that you're on the road. Is there any one in your house that you can trust to telephone us as soon as you have started?"

"Then That's Settled."

"No one in the house knows anything about this man, so I think I could give my mother a message to phone you which would tell her nothing and you—everything."

I stared at my former colleague fascinated. One could see the transformation of a grief-stricken, despairing woman to the capable person she used to be, suffusing her. Lillian's hopeful words, and the prospect of doing something definite in aid of the man she loved had worked a miracle in her appearance.

Lillian flashed a commendatory glance at her which I was glad to witness, for I had seen clearly that she had not quite approved of Alice before. Lillian likes people to take things standing, and she sometimes fails to realize that there are few women in the world with her iron will and perfect poise.

"That is all that's necessary, then," she said. "Hold yourself in readiness to bring him over to us whenever he comes, and let us have warning of your coming. If he tackles Midge first we will send for you if it is necessary, but spare you the ordeal if we can. One thing, don't let him guess your wish to bring him to Marvin. I leave it to your own finesse to let him believe that he has frightened you into wishing Mrs. Graham's advice."

"He will not suspect," Alice Holcombe's lips were set in a grim, tight line, which some of her refractory pupils knew to their sorrow. "And I will see that he arrives at the place you wish when you wish."

"Then that's settled," Lillian drew a deep breath and rose from the table decisively. "We don't need to waste any more time, for if I know the man, he's hunting one of you this very minute."

We summoned Mrs. Wynne, paid our bill, and passed out of the tea room. As we climbed into the car

I noticed an empty roadster standing a little way from ours, and wondered vaguely where its occupants could be, as no one had come into the tea room while we were there. And then to my recently acquired morose sense there came the conviction that I had seen the car before. I scrutinized it more closely, caught my breath in a panic, and threw my car into high. I had only one desire—to get Lillian away from that particular spot.

For the car was the one which Harry Underwood had driven along the wood road to Southampton! (Continued tomorrow.)

For Isko means scientific, hygienic refrigeration for the home—the abolition of ice and all attendant worries. It operates automatically and needs no attention. Isko makes convenient cubes of pure ice, frozen from your drinking water. For your own convenience, therefore, we urge you to call and see Isko at your earliest convenience, placing your order then if possible. Remember, Isko makes cold, electrically, without ice, at a cost that is less than the cost of ice. Isko also comes in larger sizes, for commercial uses.
