

I sometimes think that never blows so red
The Rose as where some buried Caesar bled;
That every Hyacinth the Garden wears
Dropt in her Lap from some once levelled Head.

WOMAN'S SECTION OF THE BEE

Moral good is a practical stimulus; it is no sooner seen than it inspires an impulse to practice. —Plutarch.

American People Are Their Own Government

Mary Roberts Rinehart, noted writer, who has entered politics as a candidate for district delegate to the republican national convention from her home near Pittsburgh, was asked recently to state her views as a representative American woman of the political situation. Summed up, they are:
"This is one of the most critical periods in the country's history. The nation faces a vitally necessary industrial and economic adjustment, in which every man and woman must aid. The basic economic factor is the home and it rests with the women to take the initiative in measures affecting the home. Autocracy of mass is as bad as autocracy of class. The strongest emotion prevailing in the country today is fear of radicalism.
"The people must shake off their political lethargy and realize that they are the government. The only time the United States is a real democracy is when it votes. Every four years the country puts all its eggs in one basket and must take its chances until the next general election. We have been more or less fortunate in selecting our presidents in the past, but we can't afford to make a mistake at this critical period of our national life.
"There must be no rubber stamp delegates to the national convention. They must reflect the wishes of the people they represent.
"A nation is really not an entity; it is a vast collection of homes. And all national problems must be referred to the equation of the home."

My HEART and My HUSBAND

By ADELE GARRISON

How the Release of Kenneth Stockbridge Was Achieved and What Happened Afterward.
We must telephone Alice Holcombe directly," I said enthusiastically. But Lillian put up a protesting hand.
"I don't want any inkling of this to go out of here tonight," she said. "I do not trust the telephone wires. And tomorrow, Allen," she turned to Mr. Drake, "you and Madge and I will go over to the district attorney's office with this. I'll also have Jake Wiley brought in—he's under surveillance, if anybody should happen to ask you—and when he's confronted with the whole thing, Kenneth Stockbridge will no doubt come across with the truth he's been quixotically hiding so long."
"What's the reason Madge has to be mixed up in this mess?" Dicky demanded truculently. "Isn't it enough for her to be named in this damnable scrawl?" he took up the dead woman's letter and shook it fiercely—"without her trotting down to the jail?"
"Not to the jail, Dicky," Lillian corrected.
"I do not myself see the necessity," Allen Drake began, but Lillian cut him short while Dicky glared at him.
"Madge's Suggestion."
"It's just because she is mentioned in this that she must go there," she said. "I'm going to have Alice Holcombe there also. We'll put all the cards on the table, and I believe we can keep the true inwardness of this thing out of the newspapers, which is the one thing to be desired now. You can bet Milly Stockbridge's family, who about run things politically down here, will be quick enough to come to terms when they see this. They'll be mighty glad to have the indictment quashed and the whole thing hushed up as quickly as possible. Kenneth Stockbridge will be a free man tomorrow afternoon, and he'll be out of the trap. I don't know what he'll do with his freedom. Half the town is related to his dead wife, and they're all against him, and, of course, he ought not to go back to his home."
"Couldn't we—" I faltered as I caught Dicky's astonished eye, then went on more bravely. "For Alice's sake I would like to invite him here for a few days until he gets himself together."
"Suit yourself," Dicky replied indifferently, "only he and Drake will have to share a room."
I flushed at the covert insolence of his tone. But Mr. Drake was ready with a response, and either did not notice or pretended ignorance of Dicky's tone.
"I shall have to return to town tomorrow evening at the latest," he said. "So that difficulty will be solved."
"But you must be sure to be here for dinner tomorrow night," said Lillian with the privilege she always assumes in our home to our great delight. "If Madge doesn't care I should like to have Stockbridge and that plucky Miss Holcombe together at a dinner table. They've certainly been through enough to appreciate a little decent treatment."
Dicky protests.
"I should be delighted," I said with truth. Then I turned to Mr. Drake, all my hospitable soul outraged by Dicky's coarseness:
"You simply must be at that dinner tomorrow night," I said earnestly. "A feast in honor of Mr. Stockbridge's release minus the man who set him free would be a Hamlet-left-out sort of affair, don't you think?"
He bowed laughingly, but with a touch of the impressiveness that always invests his manner.
"I don't need so flattering an argument," he said in a low tone. "Your mere wish is sufficient warrant for my staying."
"For my part," interposed Dicky sourly, "if you ask me, I think it's rotten bad taste to have a dinner celebrating that man's release from prison. After all, that dead woman was his wife; you know."
"More's the pity," Lillian said grimly. "And, as it happens, we didn't ask your advice, Dicky-bird. It isn't a formal dinner, little one, just your family, Stockbridge and Miss Holcombe, Allen and little me. And don't you call a scheme of mine rotten bad taste or I'll hold your head under the pump. That poor devil has suffered enough. Don't you begin by holding his false imprisonment against him."
"Why's he doing anything against anybody?" Dicky demanded indignantly. "Good-night! I'm going to my own room in my own home and read. Of all the crazy, footless stunts! So long, you bunch of filberts."
He swung out of the room as he spoke, and the glimpse I caught of his face showed me that it was dark with annoyance or some stronger feeling.

But when the next night and the dinner hour finally arrived after one of the most exciting days I had ever spent, Dicky was himself again, a most royal host, as he always is at his own dinner table, and to no one did he show more impressive courtesy than to Allen Drake.
Kenneth Stockbridge, pallid from his long imprisonment, and with an expression of unreality on his face, showed only by his eyes the relief from torture that the clearing of his name had brought him. He was silent throughout the whole meal, rousing himself only to answer such questions as were asked him.
Alice Holcombe from the other side of the table watched him anxiously. She herself was radiant with happiness at the release of the man she loved, yet I saw that his demeanor worried her.
"We had been through much together that day, she and I. Lillian and I had brought her the news early in the day and taken her with us to the district attorney's office. There Lillian's prediction had come true, and the order for the release of Mr. Stockbridge had been merely a formality, and one that we were able to execute within short order. And we had bundled him into the car when he was finally set free, and brought him directly to Martin, stopping only at his own old home for some articles of clothing he needed.
"It had been a trying experience, and I did not wonder at the silence of either. But Mr. Drake compensated for them. He kept up a running fire of brilliant comment upon every topic imaginable, showing himself conversant with the work and news of the world to a marked degree. I don't know when I have enjoyed listening more, although I could not but observe the old egotistical manner which had so annoyed me creeping through this speech.
"I must correct that statement, I enjoyed listening to Mr. Drake until

I happened to catch Dicky's eye in a moment when he had forgotten to mask his looks. And the glare he cast upon me was enough to make indigestible the most wonderful dinner in the world."
If the purchaser of a new pair of silk hose would soak them in warm water before putting them on the first time, then wring them out very gently and dry them, the wearing qualities would be greatly enhanced. The reason is that the soaking and drying causes the little projecting fibers to lie down smooth and they do not catch on extraneous objects and cause runs. Everyone knows that nothing detracts more from the appearance of silk hose or the attractiveness of their contents than runs.
Velour upholstered chairs should be sprinkled occasionally with fine damp salt. Allow the salt to remain on for a few hours, then brush off. The velvet or velour will be the brighter for this treatment.

Fads and Fancies
Tailored blouses of wash fabrics have long sleeves and low necks. Short wraps are in brilliant colors with unique sleeve trimmings. Tucks, ruffles, pleatings and embroidery are seen on the new frocks. Peasant fashions are reflected in some of the newest frocks for children.
Gay plaid cashes and sailor hats are seen at the southern winter resorts.
Green continues to be the greatest favorite among colors for evening wear.
A new tailored suit with a semi-fitted coat is made in a hair line check.
Curtain Hooks.
If the curtain hooks are rusty and endanger the delicate fabric of the curtain, soak them in vinegar overnight, and in the morning it will all have disappeared.

Paraffin rubbed on a shiny coat collar will make it look like new again. The flannel used for rubbing should be frequently turned.

Keeps Hair Curly in Most Trying Weather
You needn't worry about damp or windy weather spoiling the wavy appearance of your hair if you use the silicone curling method. And you can dance all evening without having your tresses stringing all about your face.
If you've never tried this simple method by all means procure a bottle of liquid silicone from your druggist and follow the accompanying instructions. It will enable you to have just the prettiest waves and curls, so natural looking no one will guess they were artificially produced. The curliness is quickly acquired and lasts considerably longer than where the heated iron is used. When the hair is combed out it will be delightfully soft and fluffy. The life, lustre and beauty of the hair are preserved by the use of this harmless product. Therefore it is also prized as a beneficial dressing for the hair. It is quite pleasant to use and leaves no sticky or greasy trace.

Timely Tips

To use tin goods with perfect safety employ the following infallible test of preservation: Upon the first insertion of knife or punch listen for the air. If this is to be heard the preservation is perfect. Turn out the contents of all the tins immediately upon their being opened.
In seasoning a fowl the flavoring may be improved by rubbing well into the flesh salt and pepper to which ginger has been added.
Old Umbrellas.
A new use for an old umbrella may be found by making petticoat flounces of the partly worn silk. Divide the latter in half, crosswise, cutting off the top and bad corners. Then join the pieces together, hem, finish and press this circular flounce of 10 inches or so deep. Sew it on the petticoat. When the silk is "cut" in the folds, possibly from being left in the case too much when not in use, sew a narrow seam on the machine.
For Books.
If your leather-bound books are shabby, beat together equal quantities of white of egg and water. Put this on the leather with a soft flannel and when quite dry polish gently.
Renovating Serge.
To renovate blue serge that is worn and shiny, first brush and shake the articles quite free from dust. Then apply with a sponge the liquid made from boiling a double handful of dry leaves about one pint of water. When dry the garments will look like new.
Keep the polishing cloth with which to oil furniture in a covered tin can. In this way the cloth can be used for an indefinite time, and the oil will not ooze out on everything it touches.
Brooms which have stood up the wrong way so that the bristles are crushed may be treated in the following manner: Put a half-filled kettle on the fire, and when it boils and the steam comes strongly from the spout apply the crushed part to it. In a minute or so the bristles will rise to their original position.

FEELING BLUE ALL THE TIME

Before Taking Cardui, This Georgia Lady Suffered Until She Would Have to Sit Down to Do Housework. Was Dizzy and Weak.
Dalton, Ga.—Mrs. V. A. Burnett of Route 6 says: "I got down with my back and sides, not able to do my work. I suffered a great deal. I had a depressed, blue feeling all the time.
"I couldn't rest at night. I was nervous. I would be dizzy and just no account at all.
"I would have to sit down while trying to do the housework; it seemed I couldn't get my breath. I was afraid I would get past going altogether.
"I heard of Cardui and began using it. I could see after a half bottle it was helping me, so I kept it up... and soon I was like a new person.
"I knew Cardui did the work, for no other medicine I took ever helped me as it did. I certainly can recommend... Cardui."
This well-known medicine, which Mrs. Burnett says helped her, is a mild, medical, purely vegetable tonic, for over 40 years used by thousands of women, with similar results to those which this Georgia lady obtained.
