OUR WOMEN FELLOW CITIZENS.
Enemies of woman suffrage have long held that women, if given the ballot, would immediately develop sex consciousness in their attitude toward public questions, restrict their voting to matters of purely feminine concern, and wholly fail to take the broad American views of state and national affairs.

Already the enemies of political privileges for women are pointing to incidents which they claim justify their opposition to giving them the ballot. They say thousands of them voted in the late primaries with never a thought or care for party, to gratify a passing caprice, regardless of its bearing on really vital matters.

The President and the Sugar Crop.
Defenders of the democratic administration have eagerly seized on the statement of Attorney General Palmer that the president's failure to authorize purchase of the Cuban sugar crop in October is due to the refusal of congress to pass laws asked by the executive.

It Pays to Advertise or Cough Up.
Prof. Ford of Princeton, recently appointed a member of the Interstate Commerce commission by the president, wrote a book about Woodrow Wilson which gratified the vanity of a man who requires his commendation laid on thick.

duced liberally to help elect the president, have failed to land an ambassadorship or a place on some well paid commission. Such is the political value of cash or flattery between book covers.
"Passengers."
When the American day parade passed last Saturday, in the marching columns were many prominent men, heads of big concerns. These had caught the spirit of the movement, and marched that they might show themselves alive to the situation.

Therefore, those who took part in that parade were testifying to the devotion they hold for free institutions. In the crowds that watched them the same spirit prevailed, a magnificent tribute to the purpose of the day. Yet those same crowds exhibited another aspect of the situation that is not so pleasant to contemplate.

While our country was at war everybody took all proper opportunity of showing loyalty and patriotism. Now that the army no longer is in the field, some have laid aside that sentiment, for the easy-going attitude of "Let George do it." They feel themselves as patriotic as ever, would in a pinch make all the sacrifices they did and more to bring victory, but they did not feel like marching. That is all.

These should realize that the combat against anarchy in this country is just as serious, although not so spectacular, as was the battle against the Hun in Europe. Not one of those business men who watched the parade would hesitate to pledge himself to the support of law and order; in fact all of them have so pledged, but they forget the effect of their example. If they are indifferent or lukewarm, how can they expect those who look up to them for leadership to be otherwise? If there is looseness in the ties that bind the citizen to the flag, may not most of it be ascribed to this failure of the big men to properly stand forth and testify to what they believe?

Base Ball Day in Omaha.
Today we have with us the Rourke family, returned from their more or less momentous journey through the wilds of Oklahoma and southern Kansas, where they were received with what passes for hospitality in the benighted region. There the host takes in his guest and proceeds to maltreat him, making him like it.

A Matrimonial Handicap.
An eastern bride of last week received wedding gifts worth more than a million dollars. We wish her a long and happy life in spite of this handicap. Those who enter holy matrimony surrounded by every luxury and butressed by great wealth are deprived at the very beginning of many of the sweetest ties which bind hearts together and keep them together, be their alliance for better or for worse.

Early Garden Products.
Those whose minds find enjoyment in going back to the beginning of things will be interested in information for gardeners published in the Sun and New York Herald. Peru had many of their most highly prized products before the beginning of the Christian era. The ancient Peruvians had potatoes, common and sweet, before Ireland was heard of; they had field corn, sweet corn and pop corn; they had tomatoes and squash and beans as well. The Peruvians garnished the tombs of their dead with garden seeds and thus established the existence in their ancient time of foods popular in the present.

A Line O' Type or Two

THE new director of the Chicago Opera Company reports that movie fans are the best patrons of the opera, and the cheaper seats are always sold. The well-to-do, he says, do not patronize opera, and something must be done to induce them to attend. Well, for a starter, how about some good music between the acts?

More German Cunning.
(Ernest Newman in the Manchester Guardian.)
The well known diabolical cunning of the "Jung" is shown in nothing more clearly than in his compelling consent to the United States Holy Week music. What have our composers been doing to allow what should have been a flourishing native industry to pass out of their hands? Why could one of our own have been seen instead of leaving it to Wagner, the necessity of writing some Good Friday Music? It is true it might not have been as fine as Wagner's, but patriotism might have compelled us to listen to it. It is one of the ironies of our situation that for our religious concert music on Good Friday we have to go to a German Opera! And so overpowering is the religious feeling engendered in every one of us by the music of the sinners in it become for the moment sanctified. I can understand most of the selections at the Queen's Hall concert creating the genuine Good Friday spirit in the United States. The organ music and the Brass Band, the Good Friday Music, and so on. But what in the name of all the saints are the Flower Maidens doing in that gallery? They are very attractive dancers, and they have some lovely music to sing, but I cannot say that I get any more specifically religious emotion from seeing or hearing them than I do from the Sixteen Palace Girls or one of Mr. John Tiller's troupes.

HAVE you noticed that great statesmen like Bill Bryan and Hi Johnson are almost always powerfully built, and lungs like a blacksmith's bellows? Ain't nature wonderful?
THE PRODIGAL.
Sweet Love, when I reconverted thee, thou didst smile.
Put up thine arrows, turned from me away,
Saying, "Adieu; we meet no more; I've even known full well I loved thee all the while.
Far have I gone, fill many a weary mile,
Finding December in the month of May;
Heard no more upon the banks of the river,
Without thee, holding earth a dungeon vile;
Behold! my soul is in tumult dire,
For in my heart a darkness more than night
Doth rule, darkness revealing not a star.
Relent, relent and fill me with thy love,
Yea, flood the world with new-awakened light;
Home am I come from wandering very far."

The VELVET HAMMER.
By Arthur Brooks Baker
WILLIAM H. SCHMOLLER.
He sells the great pianoforte, that thing of wood and wires which used to constitute the peak of popular desires; which every rising family must have to grace its hearth, to certify its quality and prove its weight and worth; which little Angelina thumps till she is out of breath, while all the stricken neighbors pray for Angelina's breath.

But Schmoller sells his wily wares for wise and gentle use, and can't be held accountable for Angelina's, and when she shows an instrument and starts to sing its praise, he hypnotizes patrons with his fascinating ways. His talk is so persuasive and convincingly complete, an armless man would buy and play the keyboard with his feet.
Aspiring owners need not pause because they lack the dough. He sells upon installment plan, conservative and slow. No money down until the van is standing out in front, and well-paid hussies stagger in with artful groan and grunt; for while we have not learned to buy our music by the pound, we love the kind that's hard to lift from pavement, floor or ground.

In the day of motor cars with horns that rasp and bark, with coarseness running wild and wide too frequent for remark, the city owes a solemn debt extensive and immense to any man who cultivates our latent music sense. So let us lay a laurel wreath on William Schmoller's brow, and never pass his music store without a grateful bow.

How to Keep Well

By Dr. W. A. EVANS
BEATING THE ICEMAN.
Those people who cannot afford ice are up against a hard proposition during the hot weather when it comes to milk. Either they have to do without or else they are forced to buy from the stores in small quantities twice a day or oftener.

In Europe during the course of the great war they learned to use dried milk to a large extent. Now that the war is over they seem disposed to stick to dried milk and we ship a good part of the goods to them. Two years ago the British government issued a voluminous report on milk powder as a baby food. Dr. V. Borland, writing in the London Lancet, gives directions for baby feeding when dried milk is used. He employs a full cream dried milk. All measurements are in terms of a level teaspoonful. He disregards age entirely and goes wholly by weight in making his formulae. Young babies are fed every three hours or a total of six feedings in the 24 hours. Older babies are fed every three and a half hours. Older babies are fed every four hours. The total number of feedings at first is five, but this is speedily reduced to four.

A baby weighing seven pounds or less is fed a number of teaspoonfuls of dried milk equal to 3 plus the weight. If the baby weighs between 7 and 10 pounds add 10 to get the daily allowance of dried milk. This total quantity is divided into four, five or six equal feedings, according to circumstances. If the child weighs over 16 pounds the number of teaspoonfuls of dried milk at a feeding is that of the second and third classes. He never goes over 30 teaspoonfuls of dried milk a day. Whenever the baby is large enough to need more than 30 level teaspoonfuls of dried milk a day he is large enough to eat milk puddings and other accessory foods. To bring dried milk back to whole milk add eight teaspoonfuls of boiled water for every teaspoonful of the dry powder. Some of the British health officers advocated diluting the milk with less than eight parts of water, especially in certain baby digestion troubles. They say that certain emaciated babies and babies suffering from indigestion do better on milk powder to which not very much water has been added.

Borland says that when a baby being fed milk powder cannot be brought to the station opener it may be all right to give directions for one month. The instructions given under these circumstances are to increase the daily allowance of dried milk one-half teaspoonful each week.
Adjust Food to Work.
A. N. J. writes: "I was on a diet six months and lost 30 pounds, but am gaining again. Can you please advise me what will take the fat off permanently, or isn't that possible?"
REPLY.
The only way to keep fat down permanently is to maintain a proper relation between the amount of food eaten and the work you do. Limit the amount of starchy food especially. Follow the diet you ate when reducing except that the quantities taken can be increased moderately.

For Neuresthenics.
M. M. writes: "I will you kindly tell me whether a young woman suffering from a long standing case of neurasthenia will benefit by marriage? Also ought four years of good medical attention cure a nervous breakdown? Are all cases of nervous breakdowns curable?"
REPLY.
Neurasthenia and nervousness and nervous breakdowns are due to the Good Recruiting Sergeant.

Omaha, Neb., April 30.—To the Editor of The Bee:—While waiting on a prominent street corner a few days ago, I listened to a wonderful story of long service in the army, by an old soldier, who was a sergeant in the medical corps. I judged at Fort Omaha, and wondered why the government didn't send out more such men to do its recruiting.

First, I noticed he was a foreign-born man; spoke at least eight languages and was United States interpreter before entering the army, he said. He told of leaving a home of affluence and wealth in the old country, by hearing stories of the army life in the United States, how he ran away, etc.; how he had fought in the Philippine insurrection; had traveled all over the world while serving Uncle Sam; how he had attained his fine personal appearance and health and saved enough to live snugly on a little ranch after his retirement soon. I heard several young men say there they intended to "follow suit."

It seems to me such a man as this one could secure hundreds of recruits, as his happy experience and satisfied expression plainly showed how squarely Uncle Sam had dealt with him. Therefore, I beg you to publish this little item in your most worthy paper.

MENTAL Trouble Possible.
Parent writes: "Do children of 8 years always talk plainly, or are there some who still talk their 'baby talk'?" My boy is 8 years old, rather inclined to be lazy in school, and he does not pronounce certain words clearly. The letter 'r' in 'light' and the 'r' in 'run' he does not sound, and he also has great difficulty saying 'reached.' When he tries hard he can sound these letters but it seems to take more of an effort on his part than with other children. Should I have his mouth examined by a physician?"
REPLY.
Examination of the mouth by a physician would not help any. Sometimes the fault is with the parents, sometimes with the child, sometimes with both. Parents sometimes harm their children greatly by talking baby talk to them. If the fault is with the child, the trouble lies in the mental processes rather than in the structures of the mouth.
