

WOMEN CONTENT WITH RESULTS OF STATE MEETINGS

General Feeling of Satisfaction Prevails Following First Political Experience of This Nature.

Echoes of the two state conventions were heard among the women of Omaha yesterday in the shape of a general feeling of satisfaction after their first big political experience. A bit dazed, some of 'em are, and a few disappointed, but still standing staunchly by the party of their choice.

Mrs. Draper Smith, who was made an elector by the republicans in session at Lincoln Tuesday declares that the convention was a great success.

"Women's entrance into the convention might almost have been called the convention keynote. We were rousing welcomed. Women were given representation on all committees where the men knew the law would permit."

Time All Too Short. "We had heard much, but saw little of any antagonism between Omaha and the state, and we believe that little will be eliminated by the participation of women in politics. The educational and health measures for which women as a unit stand could not be introduced with delegates running to catch their trains. The time was all too short."

Mrs. W. E. Bolin, who was named an elector at the democratic session, is also well satisfied with the results of her first convention. "Absolutely satisfied," she says.

Got What Was Wanted. "The democratic women all stood for the league of nations and we got what we wanted."

"And just fancy us serving tea," she laughed. "Wouldn't it have given the old-timers a shock if they would have seen us?"

Mrs. James Richardson had only a few words to say. "Never before having attended a state convention, I have nothing with which to compare my experience."

Mrs. William Berry summed up her impressions thus: "We could have gone a little farther with educational measures, but you see we were new and a bit timid yet. Of course, we women wanted the league of nations."

Mrs. O. A. Weitzel "wouldn't have missed it for anything. I believe that the women of the state will be wakened up to greater activity by the results of the convention."

Mrs. Grant Parsons says, "I was a splendid beginner. I think I was impressed most by the number of women in the Douglas county delegation. We are in politics to stay."

The Business and Professional Women's club of San Francisco is planning to build a new club house.

HOLDING A HUSBAND

Adele Garrison's New Phase of Revelations of a Wife

How Madge Wreathed Admiring Words from Dicky. It was with a little thrill of malicious joy that I saw my mother-in-law's jaw drop in amazement and consternation at my prompt response to her caustic remark about Katie's accompanying us south.

I know that no woman of my acquaintance is so dependent upon the freedom from housework that a maid is supposed to give, and which Katie really delivers, as is Dicky's militant mother. I knew also that her only reason for the remark she had made was her feline desire to scratch me in retaliation for my fancied neglect in not urging a southern trip upon her. In reality it was Leila toward whom she thought she was reacting her resentment. But in the years we have lived together she has grown so used to making me a scapegoat—all the more because I know she really cares deeply for me—that whenever she is disturbed she manages to sting me in some way or other. Generally she employs some slighting reference to the little maid who has been my loyal friend through all my married life.

Her favorite appellations for Katie are "that grinning ape," and "that ape of a girl." Fortunately, Katie has never heard the epithets, Mother Graham being cannily careful as to the occasions upon which she uses them. But I have grown decidedly tired of hearing them, and the present opportunity of giving mother-in-law a wholesome fright was far too good a one to miss.

I had told her the truth, but distinctly not the whole truth. Katie had been wishing to leave for a year, but only for a visit to Jim's uncle, who lives "up state" on a farm, and has sent several urgent invitations to his soldier nephew to bring his wife for an extended visit. It was perfectly true that the loyal couple had not gone because of their desire not to cause me inconvenience, and I was therefore glad indeed to seize the present opportunity of letting them have a richly deserved vacation.

I knew the housekeeping in tourist bungalows was a simplified affair, even if inconvenient, and that it was possible to get good day workers among the colored women of the southern towns. It would not hurt my mother-in-law, I reflected grimly, to help a bit with the housework, especially as she had apparently fully recovered from the long indisposition which began during Dicky's absence, and I waited with unholly glee the words with which she would greet the news I had just given her.

"Never Quite Sure—" "What do you mean?" Mother Graham demanded with apparent vigor, but I saw that there was no fight left in her, so I prepared to clinch my victory.

"Exactly what I say," I returned, not daring to look at Dicky. One look at his astonished face had been almost too much for my risibles. He, too, is sometimes given to complaints of Katie, gibes at her, which know he doesn't mean, but with which, man-like, he considers it his prerogative to annoy me. "I am going to let Katie go. The housework is much simpler down there, and we can no doubt get some help."

"Have you gone out of your mind?" my mother-in-law demanded, patently panic-stricken. "You know what the help question is all over the country, and then you stand there and talk about letting as good a girl as Katie go. I will talk to her myself."

She rose and started for the door. For a moment I was panic-stricken, for Katie, of course, knew nothing of my plan, and I did not know what wild notion she might take into her pretty, voluble head if Mother Graham went to her with a request to stay with us when she had no idea that she was to go away.

"You forget that it is her afternoon out," I said warily, blessing my stars for the coincidence. "But I don't think it will be of any use to talk to her. She has quite set her mind upon it."

"Get out of here and let me think, both of you," Mother Graham demanded suddenly, and Dicky and I fled.

"Look here," he demanded as soon as we were out of earshot, "that straight goods about our handmaiden flying the coop?"

Walking the Plank.
FRANCIS ROLT-WHEELER.

No, this isn't any pirate stuff. This is a game to test your nerves, your balance, and your good temper. You'll be surprised to find who's the best in your class at it, maybe a fellow you didn't expect at all.

Get two 18-foot 2x4 planks. Nail each two of them together at the ends, by cleats, nailing the cleats on the sides. That will make two long planks, two inches wide, and 30 feet long. Lay them on the ground, edge-wise, leveling the ground exactly as you go. If the ground is very uneven, find some old one-inch boards, cut them into pieces a foot

She Thought Twice.
MOLLIE PRICE COOK.

Agnes was down town shopping with her mother.

"Oh, Mother, look at that pretty girl!" she said. "That's the kind of hat I want!"

Mrs. Morris gazed at the object of Agnes' admiration.

"That's a horse on parade, Agnes, not a young lady."

"Oh, Mother, you're so old-fashioned!"

"Nonsense, Agnes, you know I'm not old-fashioned. I like to see girls well dressed. Every girl owes it to herself and to the rest of the world to look as well as possible. But there is such a thing as being overdressed. Just study that girl without prejudice."

"She would be much prettier if she wore a plain sailor hat, if her hair were dressed plainly, if she long and spike the 2x4 on these pieces, at right angles to the length of the long plank. That will hold them solid, so they won't tip.

Start two fellows at one end of each plank at the same time. At the word "go" let each try and get to the end of the plank as quickly as he can, with the only condition that he must not set foot on ground. He can wave his arms all he likes. For the second stunt in these Olympic games, walk the plank, each heel as the foot is advanced—touching the toe of the other foot. A judge, on either side, will see that this is fairly done.

The sport can work into a dozen events. Imagine hopping the entire 36-foot length of a 2x4! The fellow who does this, without toppling over to one side or the other, is some frog! Or, for the very skillful, leapfrog, landing fair and square on the 2x4, will catch the best of them. Low hurdles can be put up, with a jump to negotiate. A plank made this way will provide as much fun on the athletic field as it will on the playground. (Tomorrow—The Garden Doctor.)

LOYD SKINNER SUCCEEDS HOWE AS PRESIDENT

Three New Members Added to Directorate—Superintendent Hunt in Charge of Big Corporation.

Lloyd M. Skinner was elected president of the Skinner company yesterday at a special meeting of the board of directors of this big packing, macaroni, produce and baking corporation. He succeeds to the place made vacant when R. C. Howe was ousted by a vote of the board of directors, Tuesday afternoon, following a long legal fight between Howe and the Skinners. Mr. Howe was not present at the meeting yesterday, although he still is a director of the company.

Paul F. Skinner was elected vice president of the board and chairman of the board of directors. These new directors were elected: O. C. Redick, Dr. Robert Gilmore and C. M. Skinner. This increases the company's directorate from five to eight.

About New Directors. O. C. Redick is an attorney and wealthy real estate owner of Omaha. Dr. Gilmore is an Omaha capitalist who has been identified with the Skinner interests for a long time and formerly was an officer and director of the Skinner Packing company and the Skinner Manufacturing company. C. M. Skinner is the elder brother of Lloyd and Paul Skinner. He is founder and president of the Ralston State bank.

No general manager was elected. Directors stated that for the present the operation will be "under the direction of all of us." Mr. Howe was general manager under a 20-year contract. Directors said this had nothing to do with omission of election of general manager.

Superintendent in Charge. Paul F. Skinner, chairman of the board, said, after the meeting: "The packing plant will continue under the direct supervision of Harry C. Hunt, who is the present superintendent. Mr. Hunt had been with the Skinner company for some time before Mr. Howe was connected with the company and has practically had charge of the plant from the first. Mr. Hunt was formed."

Holdup Victim Goes So Fast Bullet Only Pierces Coat Tails

Chicago, May 19.—Lars Ryberg is a firm believer in the motto, "He who fight and runs away will live to fight another day." He proved the fact recently when encountered at his gate by two holdup men.

"Hold up your hands!" ordered the stick-up man in unison. "Bang!" Ryberg's fist hit the nearest man's jaw.

"Bang!" went Ryberg's other hold-up man's gun. "Slam!" went Ryberg's gate, as he completed his strategic retreat.

"I went so fast that the bullet just hit my coat tail," Ryberg told the police later.
