Apple Blossom Time

By Mary Learned.

It is the rarest pleasure in the world to pack a small basket with sandwiches, fruit and thermos bottle of hot coffee and walk with a May-time comrade to the big apple tree in the orchard, and there, under the fragrant cloud of pink-tipped blossoms to pass an hour in lazy, casual talk. This year the apple blossoms are large and very perfect; the illusion of being suddenly transported to fairyland is quite vivid.

In the woods, if one hunts long enough and hard enough, clumps of columbine in all the freshness of their dainty dress may be found, and in the carpet of fallen leaves the morel mushrooms stand like half-closed, ragged, tan umbrellas. In the market these are almost prohibitively expensive, but in the woods, for a stroll one may have all a moderate family can eat. They are very easy to identify.

Along the river just now there is an odd picture taking place. The water is flush with the lower road; great quantities of trees have floated down and have been caught and cut into firewood and stand in cord piles along the shore. Many houses and farms are inundated and one may see a solitary plowman apparently preparing to sow his seed in the mud. In the evening the river road is a mass of automobiles and people walking and watching the angry flow of the river, which looks like an endless lake. A picturesque note is added by the swift flying of many red-winged blackbirds in and out of the young willows.

Rather a strange sign of the time is sounded by the appearance in one village block, of five fat, motherly nanny goats. Most of us have memories of some little village in the Swiss or Austrian Alps where we have been refreshed with goats' milk and honey, and we know that the milk is exceedingly rich and full of nourishment. The little animals are economical to feed, and faithful in their return for very small kindness. We are likely to see a good many of them on duty in this country.

Loveliest of all just now are the lilacs, which are ready to burst into full bloom. In the parks they show plainly and will be the next mass of color for which to look. At Forest Lawn there are hundreds of very old bushes, and in the full tide of their bloom there is nothing anywhere as gorgeous. If Frederick the Great could drop in a phantom aeroplane from Sans-Souci he would have to say "they are more beautiful than mine!"

Wait Whitman loved the lilac, and the finest tribute ever paid this lovely flower is part of "President Lincoln's Burial Hymn," beginning:

Nebraska Song Writer

Mrs. A. I. McKinnon

Nebraskans are always interested in discovering people of talent in their own state. Mrs. A. I. McKinnon of Lincoln has recently come into recognition as a composer of songs, writing both their words and music.

"When You Look Into My Eyes, 'Quiji'" by Mrs. McKinnon, who writes as Margaret D. McKinnon, were song hits in "Isle of Dreams," a French fund benefit given in Lincoln last month. A musical skit, "My Dream Girl," in which the songs, words and dance steps were with ever-returning spring." It is a good time of year to renew one's acquaintance with Whitman. He was the great prophet of primeval and wholly natural things.

Mrs. George Still Believes Women Must Make Vote a Positive Factor

Women should take a positive stand on all political questions, according to Mrs. George R. Still, president of the Missouri Federation of Women's Clubs, in a recent talk before the Women's Commercial club of Kansas City. "The nation needs the women's vote and the women should make their vote a positive factor in politics. Their acts as voters will be carefully scrutinized and the great body of women voters will have to pay for the mistakes of the few. Women should get into one of the parties and work from the inside."

The women of London have 1,350 dressmaking establishments to cater to their needs.

Cadillac Spirit

The business world today is awakening to a new order of things. We are in the midst of an evolution, working toward better things and more stable conditions.

"Efficiency" is the watchword. Wasteful methods, "slipshod" ways and worn-out theories are being dumped into the scrap heap along with discarded machinery, and out-of-date battleships. Each in their time and place have served more or less well some good purpose, but today, confronted by new and more exacting standards, they must make way for better and more efficient agencies.

The standard of high quality manifested in the Cadillac car has been built up through efficiency and co-operation throughout the entire organization of the Cadillac Motor Car Company, developing what is known in the world of industry as the "Cadillac Spirit."

It pervades the administrative offices; it permeates the shops. It diffuses among the production heads; it extends to the workmen at the bench.

To further this spirit of co-operation and efficiency, the head of this concern, himself having studied the Alexander Hamilton Institute Course, is making it possible for his employees to better their conditions, making themselves more capable and better fitted for a greater service to the public, by enrolling them for the Modern Business Course, as taught by the Alexander Hamilton Institute. This applies to the Service Department as well as to the sales and office organizations.

Added to the already well-defined and established business and service policies of this concern, this is one more means of attempting to create an organization here, fully as efficient and serviceable as the Cadillac car itself.
