

SOLDIERS' BONUS BILL IS BEFORE CHAMBER AGAIN

Members of Douglas County Post of Legion Outline Position to Committee—Action Not Announced.

The stand of the Omaha Chamber of Commerce on a federal bonus for former service men came up for reconsideration at a meeting of the public affairs and legislative committee of the chamber yesterday.

At the request of Francis A. Brogan, chairman of the committee and president of the chamber, the legion men explained the attitude of their organization toward the federal bonus question and toward the action of the Chamber of Commerce.

Reconsideration of the question was ordered by the executive committee of the chamber, following the recalling of a resolution by that body warning against a general cash bonus indiscriminately distributed.

Following a statement of the legion's attitude toward the bonus, Larry Nygaard, Allan Tukey and T. J. McGuire, who represented the local post, withdrew from the meeting.

Plans Are Arranged For Better Freight Service in Yards Here

Operating plans for improving railroad conditions at Omaha and Council Bluffs terminals were discussed at a joint meeting of the Union Pacific building yesterday.

Details of the co-operation held necessary to secure better switching in the local yards, and for the proper handling of freight shipments through Omaha, and in and out of local shipping depots, were discussed.

Commissioners Refuse to Release Paving Contractors

City commissioners in council meeting yesterday refused to release C. Vacanti & Son from carrying out eight paving contracts awarded them by the city in July and August, 1919.

The contractors stated that the city had failed to sign contracts after awards had been made nearly a year ago, and owing to the failure it is impossible for them to perform the work.

HOLDING A HUSBAND

Adele Garrison's New Phase of Revelations of a Wife

How Grace Draper "Stacked Up" in Lillian's Eyes.

There are moments when I think I dislike Allen Drake more than any other man who has ever come into my life. And then there are others when his innate chivalry, his genuine worth show through the foppish vanity with which he has veneered his spirit, and when my admiration and my respect are gratefully constricted toward him.

Never have I felt this impulse of grateful admiration more strongly than in the seconds following his assurance that Grace Draper's venom should never reach me if he could prevent it. Panic-stricken as I was at the news of the girl's release from prison—with all of menace and terror that her freedom from bonds signified—there was something in the voice and manner of the brilliant diplomatic agent which calmed my fears instantly.

For Allen Drake's personality moor that that of any other man save, perhaps, Hugh Grantland, spells power to me. To the casual observer he is the elegant dilettante, the blase, foppish, traveled man of the world. But any one who knows anything of him or has studied him knows that there is a resistless dynamic force behind his quiet exterior.

"I looked up at him with all my gratitude in my eyes. "Thank you," I said simply, choking a bit on the words. Into the eyes holding mine so intently came a flash of some elusive feeling, gone as soon as it had appeared, but which gave me the curious impression of having seen drawn aside for an instant the closed portal of jealousy guarding the man's real soul.

"Quite a Martyr." "I suppose you're thinking, Madge," Lillian struck in briskly—I wondered vaguely if she thought the situation too tense, and meant to inject a little commonplace into it—that it's a mighty queer thing Allen and I haven't been able to keep that devil behind the bars where she belongs. And your thoughts aren't

"Oh, Father," the Twins said, both together, "whose little horse is it?" "It's Kwannon's little horse," the Father said. "Taro, you may give him the peas."

"Does she live here?" asked Taro. "This is her temple, where people come to worship," the Father answered. "We are going to pray to her today to take good care of Bot-Chan always."

"Did you ask her to take care of us, too?" asked Take. "Yes we brought you both here when you were a month old, just as we are bringing Bot-Chan now," the Father replied.

"Does she take care of all the little children?" Take said. "She loves them all and takes care of all who ask for her protection."

"My!" said Take. "She must have her hands full with such a large family!" Her father laughed. "But you see she has a great many hands," he said. "If she had only two like us, it would be hard for her to take care of so many."

"I never say her take care of me," said Taro.

"We do not see the gods," their father answered. "But we must worship and obey them just the same."

"I think Kwannon must love little children," said Take, "because she

Card Index of Names. FRANCIS ROLT-WHEELER. It is not everyone who can undertake physical work when it is desired to make a little money out of school hours, or during vacation.

For such, there is an opportunity in every city and village, and through all the country districts, in making lists of names and addresses. Bankers are interested in the names of people who have no savings accounts, business houses who sell goods by mail, insurance agents, real estate dealers, and business people generally, will be only too glad to buy such lists.

In order to do this, the list gatherer must have a good large card index cabinet, with the name and address of everyone in the family of everyone in the district. An arrangement can be made with the local real estate dealers to send a notification of every sale of property, or of any change of tenancy.

The girl, or fellow, doing this should watch the local papers closely. On notice of a birth, mail order houses specializing in baby wear may be notified in the case of their business, and they have her, but I wish them joy of their bargain," he finished grimly.

"I don't think you're in the slightest danger from her for a long time yet," Lillian said, and the words were an assurance of safety. Almost any one else would have tried to make me believe that I never would be in danger from Grace Draper. But Lillian is not only too honest but too wise to promise me anything of the sort.

"Watch out for her, order your daily actions as if she were a constant menace, and then, with Allen and me in the background, you'll have nothing to fear. And before many moons we'll land her where she belongs for keeps."

Startling Heavy Train

GRANT M. HYDE. "I don't see how a railway engine can start such a heavy train, Daddy. Today I saw an engine start off with a train of 12 great steel passenger cars. The other day I saw one engine pulling 82 freight cars—just as easy."

"Well, sonny, the engine really does not start the whole train at once. Probably it couldn't. It starts the train one car at a time—picking up the first, then the second, then the third, and so on. By the time it has started the last car they are all rolling, and their momentum helps to keep them going. Once they are under way, the engine merely has to keep adding to their momentum, gaining speed.

"How is it done? By means of the 'slack.' There is a little slack, or 'play,' in the couplers between the cars and in the springs to which the couplers are attached. One car may be pulled ahead several inches without moving the next. This slack enables the engine to start the first car alone, then the next, and so on. In a freight train you can hear the slack stretched out—bang, bang, bang—as the cars get the pull of the engine.

"You'll notice sometimes that an engineer backs up a bit before he starts ahead out of the station. By backing up, the engineer pushes them together and puts the necessary slack into his train. Usually, however, he puts in the slack as he stops. He can do this because he has two sets of air brakes—one on the engine alone and another on the rest of the train. As he comes into the station he first stops the engine and then as the cars push into it he sets the brakes to hold the slack.

"As you ride on trains, notice how various engineers handle the two sets of brakes. One engineer stops with a bang that throws you out of your seat—he simply stops his engine and allows the train to ram into it. Another stops as smoothly as silk, first braking the cars to slow them up easily, then gradually braking on the engine to take up the slack again."

WHY?

Do We Speak of a "Porterhouse" Steak? (Copyright, 1920, by the Wheeler Syndicate, Inc.)

Many authorities have attempted to trace the origin of this name for the succulent cut of beef back to a man named Porter, who is supposed to have maintained a restaurant in the lower part of New York City. But the real reason for the term is because, in the early part of the last century, there existed in New York a number of public houses where ale and porter were the favorite beverages ordered. These tavern or saloons came to be known as "porterhouses."

The proprietor of one of these establishments, receiving a hurry call for a particularly tender and appetizing steak, made the experiment of cutting the top off a roast which had been sent in for his personal use. The customer was so pleased that he called back a day or two later and demanded another of those steaks, adding that he had never tasted one before he came to this particular porterhouse. The fame of the roast and its steak soon spread and it was not long before epicures throughout the city were asking for a "porterhouse steak" and butchers, learning the secret of the cut, adopted the term themselves.

World's Deepest Mine in Brazil; 6,400 Feet Deep

The world's deepest mine is the Morro Velho, in Brazil, the lowest working being 6,400 feet vertically below the surface, and 3,650 feet below sea level. The ventilation is effected by exhaust fans, and a $200,000 refrigeration plant insures that, no matter what the depth, the working temperature in the slopes shall never exceed 82 degrees. The mine is absolutely dry.

Members of the New York Tax league have started a campaign to organize 5,000 taxicab drivers into a union in that city. The organization, it is declared, would result in a higher degree of efficiency and lower taxicab rates.

New Evidence Given To County Attorney In Fatal Auto Wreck

Findings of the police investigation of the fatal automobile accident last week in which Mrs. Inez Ensor met her death, in connection with which County Commissioner A. D. Compton and Harry Montgomery of Council Bluffs were exonerated, were turned over to County Attorney Shotwell yesterday by Chief of Police Eberstein.

Further evidence concerning the accident comprised statements of five witnesses that the county commissioner's car was traveling "at least 50 miles an hour" when the accident occurred.

County investigators also conducted a further investigation into the affair. County Attorney Shotwell declared the evidence obtained by the police chief would be compared with the transcript of testimony taken at the inquest.

Chief Eberstein took interest in the affair when he learned the same coroner's jury that ordered three city policemen held to district court, exonerated a county commissioner of blame concerning the Ensor case.

Girl Court Steno. Refuses To Meet Attorney's Request

When John O. Yeiser, counsel for John O'Hara in a suit against the United States railroad administration for $100,000 damages for the loss of his eyesight, demanded that Miss C. M. Mr. Yeiser opposed introduction of an alleged typewritten statement taken down by Miss Gray at St. Joseph's hospital for the railroad administration's claim department a few days after the accident.

I'M THE GUY!

I'M THE GUY who talks about you behind your back. To your face I pretend I'm the best friend you have. That's so you'll tell me things that I can twist around and repeat to others. The more foolish things you do the better I'm pleased, for it gives me all the more to talk about.

I never say anything good about you, for that isn't my game. I'm out to hurt your reputation. And if I pretend to praise you I always add a few "buts" slamming you good and hard.

I like to start scraps between friends. I tell one what the other said about him and then run to the other and work the same gag there. It's easy and it's good fun.

I can always make slurs and sarcasm very effective. And if I can fool you and keep you from knowing that I'm knitting you behind your back, so much the better. Friendship means nothing to me. It would only interfere with my game.

CABARET DANCER GIVES UP CLAIM TO BIG FORTUNE

Jim Colosimo's Bride of Few Weeks Will Let Dead Cafe Man's Divorced Wife Have His Estate.

Chicago, May 27.—Dale Winter, erstwhile "Queen of the Midnight Cabarets" is going back to earn her living by singing. The bride of three weeks was made a widow by the assassin's bullet which killed Jim Colosimo, king of Chicago's night life, two weeks ago.

"All I want of Jim's," she said today, "is the memory of him. I do not want his money or the things he gave me. Maybe I'll sing better, I know there isn't much to life now except giving pleasure to others."

Mrs. Victoria Colosimo, the woman who claims to have made Jim Colosimo king of Chicago's night life, and Dale Winter Colosimo, "Queen of the Midnight Cabaret," have agreed not to fight for Jim's fortune.

Colosimo was slain two weeks ago, soon after his marriage to Dale Winter. He had been divorced from his first wife only a short time. Both claimed his fortune at first. But now they have agreed "to preserve and protect Jim's memory." By this arrangement the skeletons said to

Relatives Conduct Search in Omaha for Jim Langston

Relatives of Jim Langston of Lincoln, who came to Omaha on Monday, and from whom no word has been received, were searching for him in this city yesterday.

According to members of the family, it is believed he left his home because of a misunderstanding, which they declared was no reason for his remaining away. According to a sister, they are particularly anxious to locate him, because of the serious illness of a member of the family, "Mickey" Langston.
