The action will have a salutary effect, and the committee is to be congratulated on the wholesome discipline it has administered to the rowdy element of Kansas City.

FAITH AND HOPE JUSTIFIED.

Political reviews, technical magazines, trade ournals, daily newspapers, public speakers, "every form of general expression today teems with a discussion of abnormal conditions. One ar another cause is ascribed, and the remedies proposed vary in degree, but all tend to the same nd. The country is safe, and all will be well eventually. That this conclusion is reached by all is only a proof of the general optimism.

People are surviving the high prices, short supplies and other ills and annoyances, sustaining with fortitude if not with patience the oppressive presence of profiteers of all kinds, and muddling through the morass cheerfully looking for the solid ground on which to press their feet. It is not that business is not good, nor will remain good. The prospects are for a number of years of continuous activity in all lines of production. Projects for the future are numerous and attractive, and are getting reasonable support, to the end that they will develop in time into genuine enterprises of merit. Never were so many well considered plans for the expansion of business before the public at one atime.

What is supporting this mood at a time when everyone is more or less disturbed as to just what may take place? It is the abiding faith of the American people in their own genius, the unconquerable hope for better things that has always animated and spurred them on. "Jazzing "around" may or may not be at an end, but under the surface disturbance rests the big body of the people, firm and clear in its determination. A sweeping change may impend, as some apprehend, but it will be only a change in which all will share and to which the great majority will give their consent.

national delegates from the Kansas City district after a contest before the committee showed fraud on both sides, is evidence of a new order of things. Heretofore it has been the custom in the committees of both parties to decide contests according to factional bias. In the convention which nominated McKinley, for instance, contested delegation after delegation from the south went to the major on the demand of Judge Thompson after Mark Hanna captured the committee. It was then simply a case of might making right, factional politics submitting to the customs and practices of war alone.

Medals for French Mothers.

French mothers of five or more children are to be awarded medals-bronze for five, silver for eight, gold for ten. If decorations will prove an antidote for race suicide in France, what will restore the natural course of married life in America?

Not two breakfasts a week together, obviously; nor the entrance of women into all the avocations, which makes babies a liability instead of an asset. Even the entrance of women into full political privileges promises no reform in this vital matter.

Perhaps we shall be just as well off in the long run to let nature have its way. It has never failed to find a way out yet, since man first went out with a club and battered his woman into subjection. The refined selfishness of society ultimately will thwart itself.

The Saving Conservative Body.

The senate of the United States is now, and for a generation has been, the best abused legislative body in the world; always because it has not done something greatly desired. Yet its actions, or refusal to affirm actions of the lower house, which have been most roundly criticized in years past, now almost without exception stand forth as unquestioned wisdom.

Our fathers were animated by sound considerations of prudence when they established the senate as a brake upon the hasty enthusiasms of the house. They foresaw also the political exigencies which so often impel the house, elected every two years, to do unwise things to appease transient clamor for doubtful legislation.

The senate remains, and in our judgment will continue to remain, the bulwark of sound conservative public opinion.

SPEAKING OF CONRAD-

Sir: All this talk about Joseph Conrad reminds me of what Hugh Walpole told me* about him. Conrad, as you and I know, speaks Eng-lish so brokenly that it often is difficult to understand him, yet Walpole says the man can in terrupt a conversation to dictate a chapter in a ew story, and speak with the purest English ntonation. Walpole believes the man possesses a dual personality. And speaking of Walpole, as I was, and still am, for that matter, reminds me that one morning last winter, in a Pullman washroom, I saw him wash his face and hands after donning shirt and collar, and then by some legerdemain place his cravat within his big fold collar, adjusting the knot, all unmindful of the lar, adjusting the knot, all unmindful of the admiring clock and suit trade. This faith and hope have justification, for only when the whole body moves is progress made. Americans are going forward, and have the courage to do so. Their institutions will endure, because they are founded on a basis to which the people themselves adhere. Only when the people prove false to themselves is there danger for the nation.

Let the Experiment Develop.

Now that the supreme court of the United States has declined to interfere with the experiments of government set on foot by the Non-Partisan league of North Dakota, we may expect to see a considerable impetus given to the propaganda of the league. Efforts will surely be made, not only in Minnesota, where the league is actively at work, but in other states, to secure the adoption of the plan for state-owned banks, mills, mercantile establishments, newspapers, and the like. This movement is supported by the customary arguments, glibly repeated by those who have not inquired, or do not care to know just what is involved. Behind t all lurks the desire of one group to prosper at the expense of another. The underlying theory the same that animated the bolsheviki in heir ill-starred efforts at establishing a Paradise where work would be unknown. As The Bee then advised, that the test of the idea be left to the Russians to work out, so now it suggests it may be wise to watch the course in North Dakota a little longer, until something more definite may be learned of how these business undertakings of the state work out. If human experience should be reversed through the application of Townley's doctrine, and a new system of industrial life be effectually established, Nebraska and other great food producing states may follow, but until that time wisdom lies in the way of holding to a safe anchorage. To follow Pope's advice:

Be not the first by whom the new is tried, Nor yet the last to cast the old aside.

Emigration and Immigration.

During the latter half of 1919 emigration to this country was only one-fifth of what it was during the same period in 1913, while the number of aliens returning to their native land was greater.

Six nations increased their emigration to us -France, Mexico, Japan, Portugal and Spanish America; while 36 decreased, some of them Targely. Italy dropped from 179,000 to 30,000; Poland from 87,000 to 867; Russia from 29,000 to 1.200.

The largest increases in departures of aliens rom our shores were recorded by Italians, Greeks, Roumanians and Bulgarians. Bureau of mmigration officials say prohibition is making many peoples hesitate about making the United States their homes.

Certainly a commercially suggestive epistolary communication to the editor, but rather out of date. The modern idea is to advertise where there is hostility to the product. But this company apparently believes all editors like "sugar."

General Pershing's Admirable Conduct.

Noting the abandonment of the campaign in behalf of General Pershing's nomination for the presidency, the Sun and New York Herald comments on the general's deportment while his friends were seeking support for him. Every one of them must feel gratified by what the Sun says, which follows:

As a receptive candidate for the nomina-tion General Pershing bore himself with dig-nity, with tact and with discretion. He did not pretend that he feared the office of president. He did not pose as one who believed that above all other men he was called to fill the office. He did not belittle that office or himself by feigning reluctance to coasider his occupany of this highest of all political posts as a possibility or even a probability. When he was asked if he would be a candidate his answer was, in effect, that if his fellow citi-zens wanted him for president he would per-form the duties of the office to the best of his ability. Having declared himself in this manner without presumptuousness and without mock modesty, General Pershing went on about his duty as a soldier of the republic, which at the moment called him on a military inspection tour which offered comparatively few opportunities for self-advertisement. General Pershing's bearing throughout this incident has been such as to increase the esteem in which his fellow citizens hold him.

America Has a Super-Gun.

Only the sudden end of the war, says a Washington dispatch, kept a German city from being bombarded by an American gun 100 miles away. While most of the world was skeptical as to the German "terror gun," which was dropping shells into Paris from a distance of 75 miles, gunnery experts of the United States tackled the problem from a scientific standpoint, and soon solved the secret. The weapon they have produced is reported to have a range of a little over 110 miles. The incident is of little moment, save as it shows that the application of science and skill to overcoming problems involved in warfare is not peculiar to any one nation. Americans had devoted themselves to the solution of difficulties encountered in peace times, but without entirely neglecting the theory of warfare. When the necessity spurred them on, the trained warriors of this country, with scientists enlisted in the service, produced weapons that would have exceeded those of any other combatant, had the war continued. With the deadly gas that was not used, and the super-gun that is only fired in an experimental way, the Yankees were ready to add quite a bit of interest to proceedings along the Rhine.

Now impend the excitements and anxieties of the season of presidential nominations, always a time when stirring incidents arouse the people to keenest interest in the news of each day's doings where national history is being made.

Cook's Dash for the Pole.

Sir: The animals of Yellowstone Park, never nolested, are quite tame, particularly some of the bears, which came up to the hotels and camps to feast off the table leavings. A special train of sleepers and diner, carrying tourists, arrived at the park and was sidetracked, while members of the party made the trip through. The second cook on the diner, a lanky colored boy, was an ardent fisherman, and never missed an opportunity to drop a line. Daybreak found him at the edge of a trout stream. The fish were so voracious that he had to hide behind a tree to bait his hook. The first fish had just been landed when a cracking noise in the bushes attracted the cook's attention, and he saw a large bear emerge from the thicket and amble toward him. Suddenly the bear rose, but more suddenly the fisherman left that vicifiity, and broke all records for the hundred yard dash. A short distance away there was a camp of school teachers, and the sleeping tent was directly in the path of the terrified cook. Entering the tent, he collided with the center pole, and, keeping on, carried the pole out on his shoulder, pulling down the the pole out on his should a canvas on the dressing pedagogues.
