Is Water Called "Hard" or

'Soft?'

(Copyright, 1936, by the Wheeler Syndicate, Inc.)

Water which comes from various sources naturally contains different amounts of the salts or other chemicals which it has dissolved in its journey. For example, a river which traverses a country containing a considerable amount of lime will dissolve some of this and carry it along in solution, just as the water of the ocean carried the salt. These chemicals dissolved in the water tend to make it harsh or "hard" to the touch and prevent the free lathering of soap, which is one of the distinguishing factors of soft" water-so called because Practically all water taken from rivers or lakes is hard because it contains chemicals in varying degrees, all of which have been absorbed by the water in its passage from the source of the river to the point at which the water is removed. It follows, therefore, that the closer one gets to the original source of the water the purer or "softer" it will be-which accounts for the fact that rain-water was formerly in such demand for washing though modern chemistry has evolved methods of removing a portion of the dissolved minerals and thus makes hard water much less harsh than it Housekeeper Tells of Threats Made Against Turfman by Married Admirer.

New York, July 1,- The "woman theory" again came to front in the Joseph Bowne Elwell murder mystery today.

According to information in the possession of District Attorney Swann, Miss Anna Kane, housekeeper to Elwell, made a statement revealing that one of the slain turfman's married women friends who was infatuated with him had threatened to shoot him because of his attentions to other women Miss Kane is now living at her home in Ireland.

Another striking phase of the bill is the singing of popular songs and the telling of humorous stories by Gene Greene. He is one of the most amusing entertainers on the vaudeville stage. For next week the manuschment has sequred Basil Kings famous story. The Street Called Straight, as its feature attraction. The book was read by millions and those who have seen the photoplay predict that it will attract many millions.

Toping the vaudeville bill at the Empress is "The Curio Shap," a musical comedy by Emile de Recat, with pretty girls, pretty clothes and pretty music. "What the devil is he coming here for?" he asked with all the unreasonableness which he is capable of exhibiting when things displease

"I do not know that he is coming," explained, with a stiffness in my manner which I could not for the life of me restrain. "When your mother and I said that we could not find pieces of our gowns, Mrs. Durkee chose to believe that we did not wish to give them, and informed us that she meant to tell the major we were hunting for them, and that he was to call here for them. She hurried away before either of us could protest. But, of course, if you object, it will be very easy for you to take the pieces to her. Then he will have no possible excuse for coming

Of course I knew-and womanlike rejoiced in the knowledge, and the weapon it fitted to my handthat Dicky would rather emulate the old martyrs and offer his body for torture than to face little Mrs. Durkee's malicious smile and enjoyment of his appearing before her in the role of jealous husband objecting to a perfectly excusable and innocent call from the man she held in such high regard.

My husband's temper boiled over in a single forcible and profane ejaculation. Then he turned upon his heel with an air of withering dis-

I have seen the time when a scathing remark like this from Dick would have brought bitter tears and a night of wakeful misery. That was the first year of my marital experience. But now, while both tears and anger still come to me I find that more frequently still I am able to smile with real amusement at the explosions and vagaries of my temperamental hus-

But I was surprised when the loor closed a bit vehemently under Dicky's hand to see softening the grim visage of my mother-in-law an answering smile to the one quirking the corners of my own mouth. An instant's reflection, however, made me realize that it was only what I might have expected from what I knew of my mother-in-law's inherent sense of justice, and a certain grim humor which she possesses. Besides, I reflected, her son had just involuntarily humiliated her by his disclosure of the fact that he and not Major Grantland, was responsible for the idea which she had ridiculed so strongly. I also knew that she was feminine and inconsistent enough to resent it. "He'll Cool Down"

Her comment matched her smile. "If Richard were younger," she said grimly, "I could turn him over
