

ADAMS COUNTY PRISONER SAYS WAY TO FREEDOM

Man Wanted on Several Charges Escapes From Hastings Jail in Broad Daylight.

Hastings, Neb., July 2.—(Special Telegram)—Ollie M. Barger, bound over for trial on the charge of selling a mortgaged automobile, escaped the county jail in broad daylight today, making his way through a hole in the outer bars, seven inches wide and a foot high which he cut with a case knife and a chemical. Other prisoners said he had been working on the hole for several days.

Barger has been accused of various other offenses, one of which was passing a bogus check in Omaha and last night two officers arrived to take him to Minneapolis for trial on a forgery charge.

Barger's family live near Elm Creek, Neb. Some time ago Barger feigned insanity and was committed to the state hospital for insane which returned him to the jail. Later when an officer arrived to take him to Lincoln for trial there Barger barricaded himself in his cell that he could not be removed.

Policemen Who Struck Mother Not Permitted To Testify Against Her

District Judge Sears Thursday refused to permit Vincent Cain, a policeman, to take the witness stand in behalf of his father, charged by his wife with nonsupport, after Cain had admitted that he had at one time struck his mother, blacking her eye.

"I have borne 11 children, six of whom are living today, and I have not contributed to my support since last February," the elder Mrs. Cain testified.

"My son there," she exclaimed, "is here to testify for his father and he struck me three years ago and knocked me down."

The judge ordered the policeman to come before the bench. The officer admitted having struck his mother.

"No man who has struck his mother can testify in my court," said the judge.

Mother's Plea Saves Son From Sentence to Jail

A mother's plea touched the heart of Police Judge Fitzgerald Friday morning and saved Wendell Nolan, 17-year-old son of Attorney T. J. Nolan, from jail on a charge of speeding.

The boy had been sentenced to three days in jail, but after hearing the mother's plea, the judge revoked the jail sentence and imposed a fine of $25.

Nolan was charged with driving his car 40 miles an hour. He is said to have pleaded guilty to driving 35 miles an hour.

TWIN STORIES BY LUCY FITCH PERKINS

Irish Twins Ask for a Story.

"The Saints help us! The caken is bewitched," wailed poor Grannie. She picked it up, and tossed it from one hand to the other, while she blew off the ashes.

Then she dropped it, burned side up, into the kettle once more, clapped on the cover and set it where it would cook more slowly. When that was done, she looked at Eileen's fingers. "It's not, so bad at all, mavourneen, praise-be to God," she said. "Sure, I thought I had you killed entirely, the way you screamed!"

"Eileen is always burning herself," said Larry. "Mother says 'tis only when she's burned up altogether that she'll learn to keep out of the fire at all!"

"'Twas all the fault of that disgraceful old hen," Grannie Malone said. "Sure, I'll have to be putting manners on her! She's no notion of behavior at all, at all. Reach the sugar bowl, Larry, avic, and sit down by the table and rest your yoke."

Grannie poured the tea, and they had milk and sugar in it. The little caken was broken open and buttered, and, "Musha, 'tis fit for the Queen herself," said Larry when he had taken his first bite.

And Eileen said, "Indeed, ma'am, 'tis a grand cook you are entirely."

"Sure, I'd need to be a grand cook with the grand company I have," Grannie answered politely, "and with the fine son I have in every letter! 'Tis a great thing to have a good son, and do you be that same to your mother, the both of you, for 'tis but one mother that you'll get in all the world, and you've a right to be choice of her."

"Sure, I'll never at all be a good son to my mother," laughed Eileen. "Well, then," said Grannie, "you can be a good daughter to her, and that's not far behind. Whist now, till I tell you the story of the Little Cakkeen, and you'll see that 'tis a good thing entirely to behave yourselves and grow up fine and respectable, like the lad in the tale. It goes like this now:

bones. I'll have the tea ready for you in a minute. Sit down, too, Eileen, while I get the potatoes." She took the tongs and drew out the potatoes, blew off the ashes and put them on the table. Then she poured the boiling water over the tea-leaves and set the tea to draw, while she took the caken from the kettle.

"'Tis not burned so much after all," she said, as she looked it over. "Sure, we can shut our eyes when we eat it."

She drew her own chair up to

I'M THE GUY!

I'm the guy who won't "play the game" unless he can make the rules. You may think I'm "spoiled" or a "fathead," but I don't see why I should do anything another fellow's way if I'd rather do it my way.

I want all the advantage all the time and I know how I can get away with things even if I'm wrong. If it turns out right it gives me a chance to throw out my chest and pose as a smart guy. And if it turns out wrong it gives me a chance to make up my own alibi.

But if I let the other fellows make the rules I don't get a chance either to shine or to get out from under so cleverly. They may know more about it than I do, but I don't want them to get that impression. And rather than give them the edge on me I'll stay out and play safe.

Believe me, I'll never give you a chance to put anything over on me! But I'll put it over on you every time I can.

WHY?

Do "Court Cards" Appear in a Deck?

(Copyright, 1920, by the Wheeler Syndicate, Inc.)

The names of the four kings in a pack of cards are David, Alexander, Caesar and Charles—the names of the four monarchies of the Jews, the Greeks, the Romans and the Franks under Charlemagne the Great. Their names still appear on the "kings" in a French deck of cards.

The queens, whose names are also retained in the French packs, are Argine, Esther, Judith and Pallas—typical of birth, piety, fortitude and wisdom—Argine being an anagram for Regina, the Latin equivalent of Queen.

The "knaves, or jacks" represented the servants to the knights—"knave" originally meaning "servant," as shown by an old translation of the Bible which refers to St. Paul as "the knave of Christ." The names of Hogier and Lahire, two famous knights of the 15th century, which appear on the French cards have led many persons to believe that the "knave suit" represented the knighthood, but a study of early French and the name applied to the cards shows that they referred to the servants, rather than to the masters.

Drake Officials Are Silent as Attorney General Gets Busy

Tenants of Drake Court Friday calmly awaited the next move of their landlord in the fight over increased rentals.

W. B. Drake, president of the Drake Realty and Construction Co., owner of the property, said that he did not know what the company's next move would be. "Probably by Monday I will have something to say," he said.

Tenants who offered to pay the old rental rate, and whose money was refused, have placed the money
