

TWIN STORIES

BY LUCY FITCH PEBBLES

Irish Twins and the Donkey.

The twins slid off Colleen's back and ran to the spot where the camp had been. There, indeed, was the mark of a fire, and near by were some wisps of straw. There were the marks of horses' feet, too, and Eileen found a white goose feather by the thorn bush, and a piece of broken rope.

She rolled over and picked herself up. "I may be soft to fall on," said Larry, "but I'm the easier squashed."

for that! Look at me now! It's out of shape I am entirely, with the print of yourself on me!"

Then—"Whatever will we do with Colleen?" Eileen said. "She's got her nose in the thistles and we'll never be able to drag her away from them."

They pulled on the halter, but Colleen refused to budge. Larry got up on the bank and pushed her. He even pulled her backward by the tail! Colleen didn't seem to mind it at all. She kept right on eating the thistles.

At last Larry said, "You go on with yourself to Grannie Malone's for the jug, Eileen, and I'll stay here until she finishes the thistles."

So he sat down by the road on a stone and Eileen trotted off to Grannie's.

Parents' Problems

IV. How can the habit of making puns be checked in a 15-year-old boy? Do not check it. It is a harmless habit, and though a crude form of humor, still is a form of that most valuable gift, humor. Laugh at the boy's puns.

WHY?—

Do We Speak of "Scraping An Acquaintance"?

(Copyright, 1920, by The Wheeler Syndicate, Inc.)

A number of authorities trace this back to the Emperor Hadrian and an incident which is reputed to have occurred during his reign. According to this story, the emperor visited one of the public baths in Rome one day and saw an old soldier scraping himself with a piece of broken bath tile. Recognizing the soldier as a former comrade and feeling pity for him because he could not afford to purchase a flesh-brush, the emperor sent him a sum of money and some bathing garments. The next time that Hadrian came to the bath he found it filled with old soldiers, every one of whom was industriously massaging himself with a piece of tile. The emperor caught the idea at once, but laughed and said:

"Scrape yourselves if you wish, but you will not thereby scrape an acquaintance with me."

Other authorities who profess to believe that this tale has no foundation of fact maintain that the expression refers to the custom of scraping the foot behind in bowing, a custom which was always followed in the formal court of Louis XIV.

COMMON SENSE

Business and Receipts.

By J. J. MUNDY.

You may bank on it that the man who becomes angry because you insist that every dealing you have with him be placed on a business basis is not an honest man, or he is not a good business man—one or the other.

The man or the firm that objects to giving you a receipt for the payment of an account should be watched. It is not creditable nor derogatory to a man's honesty to ask him for a receipt for money paid, and the man who looks upon such a request as an inference that he is dishonest is not a safe man to do business with, because he does not work along business lines, and he is therefore quite likely to fail to erase an account against you.

Get a receipt every time you pay a bill and save the receipt.

The man who has an account against you may be honest enough but through error or oversight he may not give you credit for a certain payment, and the matter may run along for some time or until he has forgotten it, and you may be compelled to pay a second time if you have no receipt.

Almost every man who has not made a practice of saving receipts has learned a lesson by having to pay a bill twice.

So far you may have been lucky, but you may get caught if you make a practice of running bills and paying in lump sums, not getting a receipt.

Hundreds Attend Annual

Outing of Manufacturers

The annual outing of the Omaha Manufacturers' association was held at the Field club last night. During the dinner about 300 prizes, consisting of shirts, dresses, leather goods, food products, cigars, candy and other articles manufactured in the city, were distributed among those attending. A dance followed. In the afternoon several members of the association played golf. About 250 members and their families attended.

Raise $1 to $10.

I'M THE GUY!

I'M THE GUY who lives upstairs over your head and saves all his pounding to do Sunday morning and late at night.

Why should I worry about how I will sound downstairs or bother about times and hours just because you have the bad luck to live under me?

I do odd jobs around the house not when you want me to, but when I want to do them, and if I want to get up early Sunday morning, or put the jobs off until bedtime, that's my business, not yours.

And if I find the floor the most convenient place to use as a workbench that's wholly my own affair too.

If I stopped to think about you every time I wanted to drive a nail or flatten out a piece of tin or put a box together, I'd never get anything done, because I don't want to waste my regular hours in working when I can find something better to do.

If you ask my advice, I'll say don't go to bed until I'm all through, and then you won't be disturbed.

And when Sonnie joined the ranks of the wage earners—

CAN'T you remember years ago, when, one day in June, you graduated from school, and Dad said: "Son, come along to town with me and we'll stop in to see Mr. Smith about that job he has for you"? And do you recall those few drops of tears on Mother's face, as you and Dad started out together? That was Mother's first realization that her boy had really grown up.

Is it any wonder then that Mother had those almost superhuman results with her baking that day—that she found untold comfort in her work? She had lived in rich anticipation of this hour. Mother wanted to see Sonny make good; her every thought was of him; and in kneading her bread she gave him her every wish. She put love, ambition, determination and courage into every loaf—such bread Mother had never made before. And Sonny's lunch was fit for a king.

And so, in making TIP-TOP and HARD ROLL BREADS, we try to equal those standards which your Mother left for us. We want them to be so good that they will bring back to you those memories of yesterday—of the day you took your first job downtown—that your enjoyment in them may be the greater.

Order TIP-TOP and HARD ROLL BREAD from your grocer. Try some of the sandwich recipes here given, and your boy in starting on his first job will have the same advantages as you had.

Sandwiches that kids like to carry—

Carrying your luncheons is real economy these days, and the pleasure in knowing that Mother prepared it also adds to the enjoyment.

Try These—

Bolled ham, ground fine, mixed with mayonnaise dressing and chopped sweet pickles. Spread thick on buttered slices of bread.

Fry an egg, after mixing well with chopped onion and ham, add lettuce leaf and place between buttered slices of bread.

Olive meats, ground and mixed with chopped English walnuts and mayonnaise dressing, spread between buttered slices of bread.

These are good sandwiches for lunches. Try them this week and see how well they are spoken of.
