THE MORNINGS MAIL

Drawn for The Bee by Sidney Smith.

Parents' Problems

I'M THE GUY who borrows your garden tools and returns them all broken and rusty.

Why should I bother to repair them, or pay to have them fixed when I know YOU'LL have to have them fixed before you can use them?

The breakage is a risk you run when you lend them to me. You might have broken them yourself, so what's the difference.

And as for the rust, that's on 'em because I left them out in the rain instead of either taking them in the house or returning them to you when I finished using them. I might have wiped them off with kerosene before I brought 'em back, but that would have been too much bother.

If I was going to all that trouble, I'd have tools of my own to waste it on. It's easier and cheaper—to borrow yours.

That's why I do it. (Copyright, 1920, by Thompson Feature Service.)

I'M THE GUY!

V.—How can city children study nature, except in books?

There is a good deal of "nature" in the city, if one looks for it. The parks have trees and birds and some flowers. Many streets have trees, and all have English sparrows. In or near many cities are natural history museums; these are of great interest and help to young nature students.

TWIN STORIES BY LUCY FITCH PERKINS

Irish Twins Tell the Secret. Then Mr. McQueen brought out his notched stick. "We've sold the pig," he said, with his finger on the first notch, "and the butter and eggs was the second notch." Then he went over all the other notches. "And besides all else I've bought Herself a shawl," he said to the Twins.

The Father and Mother looked at each other. "Now, what are they all at?" said Mrs. McQueen, "but the best children in the world of the world? Wasn't I after telling you that we'd make it out somehow? And to think of her being a thoroughbred like that and we never knowing it at all!" She meant the pig.

But Mr. McQueen never gave a word. He just gave Larry and Eileen a great hug.

Then Mr. McQueen went over all the errands with his wife, and, last of all, he brought out the shawl. "There, old woman," he said, "is a fairing for you!"

The Saints be praised for this day!" cried Mrs. McQueen. "The rent paid, and me with a fine new shawl the equal of any in the parish."

It was a happy family that went to bed in the little farmhouse that night. Only Mrs. McQueen didn't sleep well. She got up a number of times in the night to be sure there were no tinkers prowling about.

"For one can't be too careful with so much money in the house," she said to herself.

It was after dark when at last she drove into the yard. Mrs. McQueen came running to the door to the ribbons and kept them to remember her by. Then they hurried away.

Tomorrow—Irish Twins Go to Church.

MOVIES

Miss Ann and Master Michael Cudahy, children of the noted Cudahy family of packers, have done so well in Monroe Salisbury's new play, trade journals mention, that they may be exploited as stars under his guidance.

George Beban was made mayor of Oakland, Cal., for a day as a special honor in appreciation of his visit to the city on a recent occasion.

A. H. Woods, the New York theatrical producer, has been urging Mildred Harris Chaplin to star in a stage play, and her present visit in the metropolis may have something to do with the matter.

Fatty Arbuckle, having finished "The Traveling Salesman," will next be the pivot of a film version of "Brewster's Millions," with Betty Ross Clark as leading woman.

"Hard-Boiled Mable," George Westcott's story, which appeared recently in the Saturday Evening Post, is being made into one of the richest comedy dramas ever filmed. Every line of the story is full of clean, screenable fun.

Before entering the films Blanche Sweet, star of "Simple Souls," which closes at the Moon theater today, was a well known stage personality, having appeared before the footlights with such celebrities as Gertrude Hoffman, Chauncey Olcott and others. She made her screen debut under the old Biograph banner and her first big feature was D. W. Griffith's "Judith of Bethulia."
