Was the Servant Right?

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.
An Omaha matron who reigns in a beautiful home, had a telephone conversation the other morning with a prospective servant in her house. Mistress and maid seemed to be coming together very nicely on arrangements, when the former said: "What is your given name? If you come here to work I won't want to call you Mrs. So and So."

Do You Know---XV

Three Questions a Day for the Housewife.
1. Whether, now that roasted peanuts are so expensive, it is practical to buy raw peanuts and roast them at home?
2. How may the fat be taken as the best of quality of the beef you buy?
3. How to take coffee stains from silk?
(These questions will be answered tomorrow by the Housekeeper.)

Answers to Yesterday's Questions.

1. There is even more reason why you should do as much canning as possible this year than in war time, because of the greatly advanced price of everything that the canners need. Besides it is feared that there will not be enough canned things to go around this winter.

2. The best way to make green apple sauce is to wash and quarter the apples and stew them, skins, cores and all. Then strain and add sugar.

3. The quickest way to clean silver is to put it in an aluminum pan filled with boiling water to every quart of a teaspoon each of baking soda and salt is added. Boil, rinse and dry.

(Each of these household problems has been worked out by the author, who has not only taken a course in scientific housewifery and dietetics at Columbia university, but has written and edited women's newspaper and magazine features for years, but is a practical housekeeper as well.)

Holding a Husband

Adele Garrison's New Phase of Revelations of a Wife

The Way Dicky Strove to Quiet Madge.

What was it that I must not hear? As the door closed upon Maj. Grantland's urgent insistence I found myself trembling with vague fear.

Something must have happened that he was afraid would upset my shattered nerves, and it must be something so important, something so such that I would find out that he had been compelled to enlist Dicky's aid in keeping it from me.

I knew the latent antagonism between the two men too well to console myself with the thought that either would have appealed to the other in any trivial matter.

With my imagination sharpened to a razor's cutting edge I began to consider the events of the journey, to see if in them lay any confirmation of my fears.

Had something happened to Junior? It would have to be the American, the remembrance of Maj. Grantland's unusual consideration for me made me listen to my common sense, which had been strenuously striving to be heard above the clamor of my jangling nerves, and to impress upon me as insistent that I be kept in ignorance of some hitch in his motor transfer plans as he would be of something really vital.

But Dicky's face, when he came back into the room, dispelled that idea at once. His is not the "poker" face which Harry Underwood, Allen Drake and Hugh Grantland possess. There is something too boyish and volatile about him for him to be able absolutely to control his facial muscles—and I love him all the more because of it. My Peter Pan!

He was making a tremendous and visible effort to appear unconcerned as he came back into the room, but I saw that he had received a piece of astounding news. It was affecting him curiously, too. He had received a shock, but there had been no horror in it. I could tell that from his eyes, which held in them blank amazement, lively interest, the necessity for keeping his news a secret, but nothing else.

I had lost all control of myself by this time. I caught at Dicky's sleeve and raised myself to a sitting posture.

"Oh! What is it?" I cried. "What has happened?"

My husband looked at me in simulated astonishment.

"Why, nothing at all!" he said with palpably assumed lightness. "Look here, child, this will never do. You're trembling like a leaf."

"Tell me the truth, then," I stormed. "Maj. Grantland called you out of the door, and I distinctly heard him say, 'She must not hear.' Now I must know what it is that you are afraid to tell me. Has anything happened to Junior?"

The query was a deliberate trap. I had settled in my own mind that the child was perfectly safe, but I thought I could draw out the real truth if Dicky saw that my worry was taking an entirely wrong direction.

The ruse worked instantly. He put his hands on my shoulders and gave me a little shake.

"There's nothing at all like that. Old Grantland received some news that disturbed him, something about a strike of switchmen or something; nothing for him to worry about, but he's a regular granny if ever there was one."

Parents' Problems

IV. What course should be followed with a timid boy of 12 who is sometimes "frightened into not telling the truth?"

This boy should be very gently treated. Never question him angrily, impatiently, or even hastily. Teach him that no fault is so serious that honest acknowledgement of it and promise of amendment do not go far to erase it. Explain to him the prime importance of truth in daily living.

During the war women were employed as life savers along the beach and at the city swimming pools in St. Louis and they proved so efficient that they are now preferred to men.

COMMON SENSE

NEVER TROUBLE TROUBLE 'TIL TROUBLE TROUBLES YOU.
By J. J. MUNDY.

You are worrying about the cost of living, the likelihood that wages may come down and that costs may not drop correspondingly, and you cannot see how it would be possible for you to live on less than you get now.

You have no coal, cannot get any. So you stew and fret about the winter and how you may freeze next winter, and at the same time you are not satisfied with the heat of summer.

You are so miserable that you get no enjoyment out of these summer days, which should give you strength and inspiration for next winter.

With all that you say and do, you cannot change conditions, can you? Suppose the future does bring hardship; it need not make the present unhappy also.

Anyone can find trouble if there is a disposition to look for it. Learn to enjoy your today, and make preparations to meet emergencies in the best way you know, but do not worry about things till the time comes.

And who knows but the time may bring such wonderful luck that you will not have to suffer anything your imagination had pictured.

Be happy today.

A proprietary medicine, like everything else that comes before the public, has to prove its merits. The law of the survival of the fittest applies in this field as in others. The reason for the tremendous success of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is because it has been fulfilling a real human need for forty years, so that today thousands of women are enjoying their health and happiness to the marvelous power of this famous medicine, made from roots and herbs—nature's remedy for woman's ills.

Had there been an accident to some member of the party? My father! I started up from my berth at the thought, then sank down on it in swirling helplessness. No matter what had happened it could not leave the room without assistance.
