Holding a Husband Adele Garrison's New Phase of Revelations of a Wife

How Major Grantland Sent the Man His Way.

At the sight of the closed car gliding toward the limousine in which I sat I felt all the vague fears to a physician for examination. The of my journey south, crystalize into Major Grantland's sharp terror. persistent telegraphing, the torn pieces of the telegram which I had picked up when they had dropped from Dicky's pocket, the race—for it was nothing else—which the officer had made with this very car passed quickly in review before my What menace to me or mine was hidden behind those curtains? The driver leaned out of the car as he drew it up beside the one was in, and called out blatantly:

"Can you tell me the way to the Cedar Crest Inn?" Instead of answering him directly Major Grantland threw a question at him. "Isn't your name 'Garland?"

"That's my moniker," the man replied flippantly. "You work at the Cedar Croft Golf club."

"Right you are old top."

Grantland Pretends. "Drop that!" the officer's voice was savage. "I thought I'd seen you there. If you're Garland, you know every door in this village. But I'll repeat the information. It's a block down," he jerked his thumb back the way we had come, "and a half-block to the right. Now get out of here."

"What the-" the man began truculently. "I'm Grantland, Major Grantland, that enough for you?" It evidently was more than enough for the fellow's mouth flew open

Named Negro Leader At Negroes' Meeting

New York, Aug. 20.-J. W. H. Eason of Philadelphia was chosen last night as the leaeder for the next four years of the 15,000,000 negroes in the United States by the Universal Negro Improvement association in convention here. Marcus Garvey, founder of the movement for the re-demption of Africa for the negro race, was elected provisional presi-dent of the African continent.

Eason told the assemblage he would do all in his power to bring about pro-negro legislation in the United States. The day is not far distant, he said, when the negro will be a power in politics. Garvey said he will devote his entire efforts to the redemption of Africa for the ne-

They're your papers, not mine, so why should I put myself out for True, I knock them off desk, but I don't do it intentionally.

Anyway you shouldn't have them so near the edge that they CAN be brushed off.

Besides, if I stopped to pick them all up, it would take up my time and lelay me. And my time is too valuable to me to waste it in that It may interrupt your work, and Doesn't a Magnifying Glass Increase Artificial Heat?

(Copyright, 1920, by the Wheeler Syndicate, Inc.) By the use of a reading or burning glass the rays of the sun can be concentrated upon a very small area and produce heat sufficient to melt even the most refractory of metals and other solids. But the glass, as we know, will not produce the same results in conjunction with an electric bulb, a fire or any other source of arti-

The reason for this lies in the fact that the shape of the radiant body itself—the original source of heat-must be such that it be brought to a very small round point at the focus of the lens. The sun is, of course, the perfect body -or, rather, the most perfect body we know-for an experiment of this nature. It is round and it radiates far more heat than anything yet invented or discovered by man. Also, this radiation is constant, not flickering as in the case of a fire and its power may be gauged by the statement of scientists that every minute energy equivalent to 2,000 horsepower is exerted upon every acre of ground normally exposed to the rays of the sun.

If, therefore, it were possible to fashion-a sphere of fire, with a constant radiation, it would be possible to magnify the intensity of this heat at a distance with a "burning glass," precisely as we magnify the heat of the sun. But this has not as yet been accompfished, nor is it probable that it will be, because the utilization of the wasted energy from the syn is of far more interest to manat artificial sun purely for experimental purposes.
