

How to Make Jellies

By LORETTA C. LYNCH.

With every indication of higher prices in the fall, the thrifty housewife is making some jelly. True, the cost of sugar is high, and in many sections fruit is none too cheap, but the "other fellow" must pay the same price approximately as you, and in addition you must pay him for his labor, overhead and interest on investment besides.

The task of making a supply of jelly for the family pantry for winter is not difficult, if the housewife uses judgment. In the first place, too much should not be attempted at one time. The care one exercises is apt to grow lax if an over-ending quantity seems to be staring one in the face.

Another suggestion is the group method of working. Several women should plan to help each other.

A large enamelware cook pot will be needed. Tin or iron will be affected by the fruit juices often to the detriment of one's stomach. Then one should have several yards of cheesecloth, which may be folded to several thicknesses and sewed into a three-cornered bag.

Only from fruits containing pectin can jelly be made. Unless a fruit contains pectin one is but wasting time in attempting to make jelly from it. A fruit ripe or over-ripe is not nearly so good for jelly-making as a fruit that is under-ripe. Remember this when choosing your fruit.

Fruits known to contain pectin are apples, crabapples, currants, quinces, cranberries, grapes and blackberries. If you want to make jelly of peach parings, the parings must be cooked with apple. Raspberries combined with currants are the makings of a much-prized jelly.

The fruits should be washed and then cut into pieces and cooked in a very little water until soft as with apples, or, in the case of grapes and currants, the fruit should be crushed until the juice flows. No water is required. When soft the fruit should be turned into the jelly bag, previously wrung out of hot water. The bag should be hung and the juice allowed to drip into a large bowl.

At the end of the bag may be squeezed to extract the remaining juice, but this juice should be caught in another bowl. It will make a cloudy jelly good enough for spreading between the layers of jelly cake. The juice should be measured in any convenient measure. For each measure of juice allow three-fourths of a measure of sugar. Mix with juice and boil until a little dropped from a spoon will just hold its shape on a plate when allowed to cool.

When the jelly is ready, pour into small glasses or jars previously dipped into hot water. When cold, pour melted paraffin over the glass to the depth of one-fourth of an inch.

What's What

By HELEN DECIE

The most brilliant epigram attributed to the late Lord Fisher is: "Do right to any man; don't write to any woman."

In the eighteenth century letter-writing had become one of the fine arts; in the nineteenth century it began to be but a pleasant duty—often long drawn out—and in the twentieth century the one-time epistolary art is almost telegraphic in brevity.

Yet, although there is little time for elaborate correspondence in these busy days, the old rules still hold good regarding prompt responses to letters which require answers, fastidiousness as to the quality of the notepaper used and the maintenance of a certain reserve in expression, no matter how impulsive may be the emotions of the writer. ## Handy in the Kitchen.

A useful kitchen tool is made of a stick of wood about 10 inches long and three-quarters of an inch square. Around one end, a sheet of sandpaper is tightly wrapped and tacked. The other end is shaped for a handle. This is handy for sharpening knives or sandpapering cupboard doors that stick. As the paper becomes worn, it can be cut along the line of the tacks, and the worn layer peeled off.

Irish Lace a Feature

By CORINNE LOWE.

New York.—(Special Correspondence).—The riot of Irish lace is certainly a feature of dress politics this season. This familiar weave is used on all manner of new frocks, blouses and lingerie, but here we see it asserting a new right. It is to become the under-skirt of our attention, for it is a striking pattern of stripes in blue, black and white. The charming irregular yoke also is of Irish lace. This frock is designed particularly for the young girl, although it is not too festive for her older sister.

Measuring Cups.

Keep a standard cup in the sugar bin and another in the flour bin instead of the customary broken tea-cups of varying sizes usually used there.

Charcoal for Stains.

A hopeless discoloration of a black crepe de chine dress can be concealed by moistening the stain and rubbing charcoal over it.

Do You Know—II

Three Questions a Day for the Housewife.

1. Is milk a perfect food for adults?
2. How much time to allow for roasting lamb?
3. How to remove scorch marks from linen?

These questions will be answered tomorrow by the HOUSEWIFE.

Answers to Yesterday's Questions.

1. Butter was used more than 2,000 years ago, but usually as a medicine or as an ointment after bathing.
  2. To keep onions from smelling while cooking, boil them in an uncovered saucepan. Open the kitchen windows at the top. The odor will not go through the house.
  3. To clean brass. When you have no brass polish, rub it thoroughly with a mixture of vinegar and salt.
- Each of these household problems has been worked out by the author, who has not only taken a course in scientific housewifery and dietetics at Columbia university, and written and edited women's newspaper and magazine features for years, but is a practical house-keeper as well.

Picnicking Joys

It is the duty of every home manager to occasionally "drop everything" to take advantage of the glorious weather and give the family a day in the woods or the park. Such excursions will remain precious in the memories of children. It is further the privilege of every housewife to so plan her work that she will feel free to take advantage of several ideal summer days.

A few years ago even the least pretentious excursion caused a great amount of extra work and readjustment. It often was a physical impossibility for the busy housewife to manage even a half-day's pleasure trip with the children, for she didn't have the strength to spend a day before the picnic in the kitchen "making ready" for the event. In these days of progress and pure food laws, however, high salaried chefs are employed to prepare foods of all kinds ready to serve. A picnic basket, the delight of old and young, can now quickly be packed.

Some of the most delicious foods may be packed, can and all, as they come from the grocer's. What a pleasure it will be to be ready to join in the picnic spirit the next time the business members of your family express the desire to have a dinner in the woods! It's just the simplest thing ever, too. Like all valuable accomplishments, however, it requires thought beforehand.

Put in the bottom of the basket a can of veal or chicken loaf, a can of Vienna sausage and a can of sardines. A bottle of horseradish cream or horseradish mustard will make a splendid relish, and small bottles of grape juice or grape flavored lemonade solve the problem of what to drink. Also take some cookies.
