HOLDING A HUSBAND Adele Garrison's New Phase of Revelations of a Wife

What Madge Managed to Do About the Torn Telegram. For a frantic second or two I cast wildly about in my brain for some scheme by which I could get my mother-in-law out of the room long enough for me to secrete the pieces of torn telegram which I had picked up and put in my dress when Dicky had unwittingly dropped them on the floor. I knew my mother-in-law's insatiable curiosity, her propensity to have a finger in every domestic pie. If she didn't openly quiz me upon the subject she would never rest until she had solved the mystery. "Not just yet, mother," I replied feebly to her proposal to help me undress. "I'll be all right in a minute, though," I felt that every second gained was something. Frantically I nudged my brain for an idea, and then the very thing came leaping to my mind. "Oh, mother!" I exclaimed, "I hear Junior crying. Please see to him. I'll be perfectly all right till you get back, but do go."

She made a rush for the door. "Shall I send Richard in?" she threw back over her shoulder. "Please don't," I protested. "I just want to rest." "Well, you certainly wouldn't get much listening to that nonsense of his," she commented caustically. "Lie still. I'll be right back." I obeyed her injunction only until the door closed behind her. Then I sat up and with trembling but rapid fingers, unhooked my bodice, took it off and stood up that every bit of the torn paper might fall to the floor. I wanted no telltale scrap left in the gown. A piece on the floor would only betray to my mother-in-law's mind the untidiness of Mrs. Lukens' maid.

But I meant to leave no scrap on the floor. Bracing myself for the effort, I laboriously gathered every bit of the torn paper and wrapped them in a handkerchief, tying the ends securely. I looked wildly about for a safe hiding place, imagined I heard Mother Graham's step returning, and in desperation crammed the handkerchief into one of the low shoes she had just removed from my feet. I kicked the shoe under the bed and fell back upon my pillows just as my mother-in-law opened the door. "Richard Second wasn't crying at all," she said in a tone that spelled resentment at my making such an accusation against her beloved grandson. Then as she looked at me, her mood changed to one of active indignation. "Why! What does this mean?" she demanded. "Couldn't you wait for me to take off your gown? You might have fainted dead away while you were doing it."

"I know, mother," I said penitently, "but it seemed to be stifling me, and I thought I could manage it all right. I did, too," I added, "and it hasn't hurt me, but I'm shaky enough to let you do the rest, if you will." That there was no surer way of disarming resentment or suspicion on her part than by setting her to work, I well knew. For the next few minutes neither of us spoke while my mother-in-law, with some trifling assistance from me, disrobed me, put me into my night things and pulled the covers over me. Mother Graham's Ruse. "Now, if you'll just put your head over this way I'll brush and braid your hair for you," she said briskly. "I know from the very walk on that colored girl that the five minutes I gave her to bring that hot

Crime germs lurk in the teeth, and when they are put in order the criminal turns from his evil ways.—A Scientific Journal. "Some years ago," the burglar said, "My loving wife and I decided Our little son must earn his bread In less precarious ways than I did. For cops are growing keen and stern And judges harsh and unforgiving, And now a burglar scarce can earn— Without great risk—a decent living. So when we read that teeth and crime By scientists have been connected, And most of those now doing time Have left their molars long neglected, We found the youngster, hand and foot To quell his bitter opposition, And had a high-priced dentist put His little teeth in good condition. "Our child will live within the law," Said we, his trimmed incisors viewing, "A sound and renovated jaw Will turn his mind from evil doing. He'll gain a fortune of his own By living straight and clean and thrifty, And, in old age, he'll not be known As Number Four-Eleven-Fifty. "Alas, our cherished plans went wrong, Although his teeth, as we intended, Continued to be sound and strong, He recently was apprehended. The skies that seemed so fair and bright, Alas for us can never clear of, For in a fight the other night He went and bit a party's ear off."

COMMON SENSE TAKE A CHANCE. By J. J. MUNDY. For years you have been the same old plodding horse, and you are no further ahead financially than you were five years ago, and you are in such a rut you do not dare take a chance at getting out and into another business or line, which might enable you to make more of a success in life than you have in the past. If you had made a break and it were a failure you could be no worse off than you are. All you have had so far is your living, and you probably would have gotten that much out of some other line. You are pretty stupid if you cannot understand the fact that you will always be plodding in the same old line if you do not make a dash for success. Past experiences prove you will not do well enough to make it possible for you to lay much aside for old age. When it has no future for you? All men must take chances at some time in their lives—to win. You must do better or worse. Choose the better way of more effort along other lines, rather than stagnation through fear of results. What's What By HELEN DECIE To say that a man is aggressive may be a compliment to his Rooseveltian American energy, but an aggressive woman is nothing better than a porcupine in human society. Always bristling; ever ready to take offense where none is intended, her attacks come so unexpectedly that those who have distaste for quarreling, and who do not wish to put themselves in a position where rational explanations sound like forced apology, find it best to avoid the disturbing element by eliminating the aggressor from their invitation lists and by declining to accept invitations to any house where the "too-sensitive" Amazon is likely to be present. Their teachers can do much to bring about an increase of knowledge on the part of the boys and girls in these important matters. However, the best schoolroom for

What's Yours? Women's Ideas That Paid Big Dividends By FRANCES L. GARSIDE. Mrs. Alice MacDougall Found Her Fortune in a Cup of Coffee. Alice Foote MacDougall is the only woman coffee importer in the world, and she built up a business of $5,000 a month on a half pound cartons. She had a husband who was a green coffee importer, and who, when she suggested there must be a way of dealing direct with the consumer, and doing away with the jobber, the wholesaler and the retailer, told her the usual thing a man tells his wife when she makes suggestions about his business. She was left a widow with three children and $38, the business having failed. She spent the money on green coffee, roasted it, blended it and sold it in half-pound packages direct to the consumer. She found that her patrons liked her blend; she made this

WHY?—

Do Birds Sleep With Their Heads Under Their Wings? (Copyright, 1920, by the Wheeler Syndicate, Inc.) Anyone who has attempted to go to sleep in broad daylight, or with a bright light beating down upon their eyes, has learned that closing the eyelids is of little avail. The rays of light penetrate the thin covering of skin, and, acting upon the nerves which lead to the brain, makes sleep impossible unless bodily fatigue is sufficient to overcome this handicap. It is precisely the same with birds. They, too, desire darkness and privacy. As they retire much earlier than human beings, they have acquired the habit of tucking their heads under the most convenient covering, their wings. The arrangement of their nostrils and the way in which they breathe prevents them from being smothered and their feathers effectively shade their eyes from all the surrounding light, thus permitting them to secure a sound and uninterrupted sleep—an essential to complete rest and health of birds, as well as the great majority of other living things. GAVE HER STRENGTH

Mrs. Miller Says That is What Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Did For Her—Read Her Letter— Minneapolis, Minn.—"I was run down and nervous, could not rest at night and was more tired in the morning than when I went to bed. I have two children, the youngest three months old, and it was drudgery to care for them as I felt so irritable and generally worn out. From lack of rest and appetite my baby did not get enough nourishment from my milk so I started to give him two bottle feedings a day. After taking three bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I felt like a new woman, full of life and energy. It is a pleasure to care for my children and I am very happy with them and feel fine. I nurse my baby exclusively again and can't say too much for your medicine."—Mrs. A. L. Miller, 2633 E. 24th St., Minneapolis, Minn. Alkali in Shampoos Bad For Washing Hair

Most soaps and prepared shampoos contain too much alkali, which is very injurious, as it dries the scalp and makes the hair brittle. The best thing to use is Mulsified coconut oil shampoo, for this is pure and entirely greaseless. It's very cheap and costs everything else all to pieces. You can get Mulsified at any drug store, and a few ounces will last the whole family for months. Simply moisten the hair with water and rub it in, about a teaspoonful is all that is required. It makes an abundance of rich, creamy lather, cleanses thoroughly, and rinses out easily. The hair dries quickly and evenly, and is soft, fresh looking, bright, fluffy, wavy and easy to handle. Besides, it loosens and takes out every particle of dust, dirt and dandruff. Be sure your druggist gives you Mulsified.
