REDS ENEMIES OF DEMOCRACY, IS WORD OF GEDDES

British Ambassador to U. S., In Speech Before Barristers. Says They Oppose Ideas of Lincoln.

St. Louis, Aug. 25 .- The bolsheviki were pictured as enemies of democracy, of Lincoln's idea of government of the people, by the people, in an address by Sir Auckland Geddes, delivered before the Ameritan Bar association's annual convention here today. The British amviki were the real reactionaries endeavoring to establish a priviliged ;lass called the proletariat; to force on society a great idea, regardless if whether society wanted it. Sir Auckland declared that Great Britain and the United States "are co-trustees for humanity that the theory and practice of democracy shall not suffer distortion or dimunifion in spite of avalanches of assault loosed upon it by its enemies." He said that democracy should be pro-tected from the attacks by "all who desire to benefit humanity through some great idea of incalculable good. by all who as individuals seek for themselves privileges over their fellows and deny the equality of men before the law."

Defines Government Idea.

Sir Auckland defined the idea of government that constitutes the precious heritage for which the two nations are co-trustees as being 'First, that the revelation of the divine will is made to man through the understanding of all men; second, that this can be expressed in aws made by the people for the governance of the executive officers whom they appoint, as well as for the maintenance of national discipline among themselves."

Sir Auckland said that Lincoln best epitomized the best form of government the human race had been able to devise as "by the people, for the people," but, he added, "I wonder how many realize what a tremendous revolution this relatively new idea is producing in all human relationships, or even now new the idea itself is and how ittle it has been tested. Only a triffing minority of the peoples of the world understand it. I doubt if even in Europe there is a maority which supports it, certainly there is not a majority which understands it. I would like to be convinced that there was a majority really understandingly in fayor of it in the British Isles.

Must Stand Firm.
"If the idea is to continue without a serious setback, we people who believe in it will have to stand irmly together, for there are powerful forces opposed to it. So far as we know, the millions of Asia have pposed the idea throughout all their istory, although a small number of slam necessarily is opposed to it. Road Extending 4,500 Miles The bolsheviki are naturally vio-lently opposed ot it. So, too, is everyone who has what he regards as a big idea or great principle of in-talculable good which he or she wishes to force upon the people whether they wish it or not. "Theocracy and autocracy, force-ful application of the big idea, in-evitably lead to inequality before the law and so to tyranny, revolution and chaos or to decadence, conquest and chaos. That way lies no hope. Let the bolsheviki and their supporters in all lands prate as they will of reactionaries and imperialists. They hemselves are the reactionaries. Their admitted doctrine is to estab-Jish a privileged class which they call the proletariat, but they mean y that term a select body of their wn supporters. Force Idea on Society.

"Their whole creed is to force on society a great idea which has been revealed to them and to them alone, and, like it or dislike it, society is to swallow it whole—and that is nothing but pure theocracy. "We have to maintain the heritage of freedom against assault from within and without, the priceless heritage of a great idea now in danger from its popularity. Even to behind its phrases.

"Whatever difficulties might arise between our nations, I believe nothing is more important than this, that you and we stand together to defend the hard won hope of mankind that through law made by the people for their own disciplining, man will at last escape from the toils that have snared the feet of his ancestors and will have taken a great stride toward solution of the prob-lem how he shall live in communi-ties in peace and ordered freedom."

The Naked Truth

By FRANCIS J. SCULLY. Thomas Carlyle, in one of his vild moments of candor, made a remark at the end of six volumes of history which was more enlightening than all the rest of his efforts put together. "We learn from his-tory," he said, "that people learn nothing from history." If you sub-stitute "experience" for "history" the aphoriam fitted Clarence Everett Stubbs like his skin. He was born a romantic soul, he was raised a ro-mantic soul and, God willing, he would die a romantic soul. Not all the terrors of war, not all the filth and squalor of trench life, not all the agony and suffering of a base hospital existence, no, not even the just one happy ending after another. A bookkeeping job, to any sane person, after the glamor of by an eminent surgeon. He had no war, would have seemed like a success. When I rubbed the bleeddreadful anti-climax, but to Clarence Everett it was just a new fairyland of figures where 2 and 2 danced across the ledger and were joined ogether after a most fantastic chase

And so, when he was suddenly stricken with appendicitis and rushwas just one sweet song,-a trifle sweeter than it had always been, especially on such days as his life partner, who also did her daily stint in the commercial world, came to see him. That was twice a week. The other days he enjoyed himself as best he could in the company of others of the fair sex, and so easily did his romantic mind adapt itself, that you couldn't tell that he hadn't known them all his life! he had tried to explain this he would have said that he saw in all women the idealized virtues of his wife, and while he might be talking to them, he was always thinking of her. Only one benned to hold that dis-tance which is supposed to lend enchartment to the view. And for her, Clarence Everett had a most sentimental attachment, But since he never intended to address her, even in the customary informality of the hospital solarium, his attachment was hardly a sign of infidelity to his beloved but perfectly harm-less both to himself and the lady ence as the right kind of a love ofwho was receiving his purely mental cause she looked so refined, and to wife beater!" Clarence, despite old John J. Experience continually proving that ap-pearances were deceptive, he still believed in judging a book by its cover. She could not possibly have fallen downstairs, or slipped on a banana peel, or been injured by any means either ludicrous or vulgar. In this frame of mind he watched her each day. Her beauty was soothing. Her bandages gave her the heroic stateliness of a statue of justice. Her demeanor was so justice. Her demeanor was so diguified! And yet, it was one like the figure of one who had been abused by destiny, but was too proud to succumb to vulgar tears over the fact. And so Clarence Everett drank on from the cup of sentimentality.

on from the cup of sentimentality. Then one day things happened. They happened with such a sudden turn that Clarence's finer sensibilities were shocked. An older woman, whose complexion was much like stroy, they first make mad' never was that of his goddess, came for a more truly applied. Republicans are visit. Clarence recalled now that that of his goddess, came for a she had never had a visitor. Which indeed was strange. More strange still, there seemed to be no warmth in this greeting. In fact the goddess tumbled right off her pedestall She bowed her head, turned away from the elder woman and from her unbandaged left eye a tear trickled down her cheek.

"Say!" said Clarence Everett himself. Inside him welled all the sympathy of a life-long friend. He rearned to dry those tears. It hurt him even to see that delicate pink dressing gown stained.

The older woman walked away and just when Clarence was on the point of responding to his impulses, she returned. He was all set to break the bounds and ask if he could help her. With the matron of the occasion was a youth, long, slender and unnecessary looking, Clarence thought. The girl still kept her head bowed low and the petting was again renewed by the woman, who now appeared in the light of a mother. Gingerly, the youth squeezed him-self on the remaining section of the bench, and soon he was trying to dry the tears which flowed, oh, so gently, from those beautiful eyes.

"A family reconciliation, obvious-ly," observed C. E. "Mother and a younger brother, No doubt. Prob-ably he drove the car over the ditch. Touching scene. . . Ah well." He turned his head away, feeling t indelicate to gaze on such an obviously private affair. But he could not hold off forever. When he turned to look again he received his first shock, for the youth had been out and had just returned with a love offering. It didn't strike Clar-
