FASHION'S BLUE BOOK

By CORINNE LOWE.

New York.—(Special Correspondence.)—Not to let your left hand know anything about it is one of the principles of present day frocks.

Not only this, but the "good-by" side of you is apt to be very different from that "how do you do" one.

Regarding this latter fact we must mention that many of the latest models of dresses are cut with quite a V in the back, while the front is drawn up primly about the neck.

The charming little dress of pink shantung designed for vacation days shows an original one sided effect in the continuous opening from collar to hem to display elaborate natter blue embroidery. Blue and brown tussah roses to mark the stages of this opening are another individual touch upon this little frock, which in its long waist line, narrow shoulder effect, tight sleeves, and undistended silhouette embodies many of the most salient features of the mode.

Miss Eva L. Boggan has the distinction of being the first woman to be graduated from the New York chapter of the American Institute of Banking.

HOLDING A HUSBAND

Adele Garrison's New Phase of Revelations of a Wife

Why Dr. Paige Puzzled Madge. I felt like a freed prisoner as Dr. Paige issued his whimsical prescription for a hearty meal and a run through the woods. But I looked apprehensively at my mother-in-law as he spoke.

She had been so insistent upon my remaining in bed and subsisting upon a light diet after my nervous collapse on the train that I did not know how she would receive the physician's dictum. And, indeed, I think she would have registered an emphatic protest—for I saw her bridling in familiar fashion—had not Dr. Paige effectually spiked her guns.

"I see you agree with me, ma'am," he said deferentially, "that it's of no nonsense to coddle people. But, of course, Mr. Graham was anxious—we wouldn't think down hyah that he was any great shakes of a husband foh so chahming a wife if he didn't fly around a bit. But yoh needn't be a bit alarmed, suh," turning to Dicky. "Yoh wife's had a bit of a bad time nervously, but she has almost recovered, thanks to her splendid vitality and yoh mother's care."

"Your Name Is Familiar." Mother Graham was still bridling as he finished, but with embarrassed pleasure instead of indignant protest. I knew that the battle was won, and I resolved to cover her retreat with conversation, not to let her suspect that we remembered her emphatic statements as to diet and remaining in bed.

"Your name is familiar to us, Dr. Paige," I said, using the first words that popped into my head. "We are down here primarily to attend the wedding of a very dear friend, whose aunt, I believe, is named Paige."

"The big physician set down the small case which he had picked up and gazed at me in pleased amazement.

"Yoh'r the friends Edy and Lely have been writing to Aunt Dora about!" he said, and then he turned and wrung Dicky's hand.

"Mighty glad to see yoh'all down heah," he boomed, and there was no question of the sincerity of his welcome.

"Then you are the girls' cousin," Dicky said, smiling.

A Feat of Memory. "Sort of," Dr. Paige admitted. "It's second or third or fourth—I nevah can keep track of the degrees the way Aunt Dora does—she has every fraction figured out and at her tongue's end. But I was always at the old house when the girls came to visit all through their childhood before they went to New York. I made it a point to be there. But I haven't seen them but once since."

There was an odd constraint in his manner as he uttered the last word which set me thinking. I have a queer little habit of connecting remotely distant bits of conversation or incidents, as one puts together the scattered pieces of a picture puzzle.

And something in his voice made me recall a line in the letter of Aunt Dora Paige which Leila had read to me before we came south.

"Sometimes I fear that Edith is unhappy," she had written. "I had hoped."

Leila had stopped abruptly there. With what Dicky calls "the ground and lofty tumbling of my imagination" there came to me an intuition that in some manner the lives of Edith Fairfax and this "second or third or fourth cousin" had touched romantically.

I stole a furtive glance at him as he stood talking to Dicky. He was younger than I had thought at my first cursory glance at him. He was so big and assured in his manner, and his hair was so tinged with silver that I had thought him to belong in the staid forties. But as I looked at him more closely I saw that he wasn't much older than Dicky.

He was an unusually handsome, distinguished looking and manly man, with an undeniable charm of manner. Why had not Edith Fairfax returned the affection he had given her?

I brought myself up with a jerk, a scathing mental rebuke for the length to which my imagination had carried me. The man was no doubt prosaically married, with several children, and nothing but cousinly thoughts of the Fairfax girls.

But I couldn't so easily down my conviction, and long after the physician left I kept wondering about the odd little note in his voice when he had spoken of his cousins.

What's What

By HELEN DECIE

A girl accustomed to small talk does not take a complimentary remark for an expression of intense admiration. Compliments are dubious civilities in any case, but some men are like the Irishman who admitted that he couldn't keep from blarneying when he was talking to a young woman. "And, sure, what's the harm, when I mean it for the minute?"

So, the social neophyte should take all small flatteries and graces with a grain of salt. These flowers of speech, whether natural or artificial, may be accepted as gracefully and lightly as they are tendered, "for the minute." To be obviously amazed and delighted when a man pays a personal compliment evinces an awkward lack of savoir faire, as embarrassing to the kindly flatterer as it is amusing to the sophisticated on-lookers.

Activities of Women

Figures compiled by the national woman's party from the 1920 census estimates show that there are 26,883,566 women, more than 21 years of age in the United States.

In the Olympic final tryout, Miss Ethelda Bleibtrey set a new world's record for the women's 100-meter free-style swim by covering the distance in 1 minute and 12.35 seconds.

The estate of former Empress Eugenie, who died recently, is valued at more than $10,000,000. She had many jewels of curious design which are considered almost priceless.

The most eloquent speaker among the many who attended the Woman Suffrage Alliance congress at Geneva was Mme. Marie Verone, a lawyer of Paris. She spoke for 45 minutes without a note.

Dr. Rosa Straus, long prominent in philanthropic work in New York, has been in Palestine for over a year, where she has been engaged in various communal enterprises for the uplift of women. She reports that many Arab wives are deying their husbands and striving to improve their condition.

Good ventilation is extremely important in the nursery and fresh air must be freely admitted. In the room where children sleep, provided there is no draft, bed clothing must be warm, but light in weight, and mattresses should be taken apart for periodical airings and renewed if necessary.

The W. C. T. U. is alarmed at the increasing immodesty in women's and young girls' fashions, and at the annual convention held in Germantown, Philadelphia, recently adopted a resolution calling upon mothers of the land to have an oversight in the matter of the dress of their daughters.

Stirred by the call of the Polish national council of defense for volunteers, hundreds of women and girls have taken initial steps to join the army in that country. The women's battalions will be used chiefly for guard duty in garrisons and food depots and as train escorts, thus relieving the men for front line duty.

Mrs. Julia O. Rider, aged 74 years, of Fairfield, Ill., has the distinction of being the oldest graduate of St. Vincent's academy, at St. Vincent, Ky. She has just been graduated, although she matriculated in 1859. Due to the outbreak of the civil war she was unable to attend the commencement exercises in 1861, and every year she has neglected to get her diploma until this year.

Porch Comfort

If the screened-in porch is open to public view so that you are annoyed by the curious, you can prevent their seeing in by painting the screen white with white paint—not thick enough to keep out the air. You will then be able to see out but the outsider may not look in, except at night when the porch light is on and the inside is lighter than the outside.

To enclose and make secluded that part of the porch where you have the couch for your nap, hang a curtain of green denim over a frame work made of gas piping fashioned to suit your convenience. Black oilcloth makes a curtain which will keep out the rain and night dampness from this cozy nook.

A black oilcloth cover for the couch, rolled in a pole instead of folded, and at hand for rainy weather, will protect the porch couch.

To keep the porch furniture from being spoiled by the weather use carriage paint, two coats, and one of carriage varnish. The furniture can then be washed by turning on the hose and wiping dry.

Burlap, green or brown or tan, makes attractive covers for porch pillows. The coarse weave permits the dirt to go through and they should have a cover lining. For more useful, but less attractive covers, use denim.

Heavy pottery jars or crocks make good holders for the porch bouquet of wild flowers whose odor is so heavy to bring inside the house, but very appropriate for outdoors.

Veiling Tarnished Lace

Just because it is impossible to restore tarnished gold or silver lace to its original glistening brightness, do not despair, for really beautiful effects may be gained by veiling the tarnished lace with georgette crepe, fine net, gauze, chiffon, or tulle. If desired, two of the veiling fabrics may be used together.

Experiment with various samples and you will easily discover just the combination you wish.

Tarnished silver lace veiled in pale rose or blue chiffon that is in turn veiled in smoke gray or taupe gauze may be fashioned into an exquisite costume blouse to accompany a taupe or gray suit. Or the dull lace may be veiled in black georgette crepe to give a rich effect.

Of course very light colored veiling cannot be used alone over such lace, but must be veiled with a darker shade to keep the foundation lace from appearing dingy.

Tarnished gold lace veils look especially well in a clear dark blue, though cinnamon or woods brown gives an equally pleasing effect, and purple offers possibilities.

Provisions Made For Housing Students

According to Miss Amanda Heppner, dean of women at the University of Nebraska, the six campus houses now being refurbished for the housing of young women students in the fall will accommodate a total of 160. The university authorities have been hoping to acquire more houses in the vicinity of the campus, but have met objections in some cases from people with homes in the neighborhood to having adjoining property used for rooming houses. The maximum number in any one of the houses owned by the university will be 44, and the minimum of accommodation will be for 20.

Last year 700 freshmen girls entered the university, and 300 of the number lived in rooming houses. It is to provide for these inexperienced girls, many of whom are away from home for the first time, that the dean of women is planning. There will be no compulsion about living in the university dormitories or cottages, by whichever name they become known, but it is thought the accommodations will be so very desirable that many more freshmen than can be housed will apply.

A few upper class girls will be installed in each house, and there will also be a house director. These directors will either be women of the faculty, who are carrying only part time work so that much of the day and evening can be spent upon the premises, or some other sympathetic women, who are perhaps free from all other duties, will be secured. An effort will be made to set standards of living and have a home atmosphere prevail. The directors will inspect the rooms and encourage refinement of manners and habits.

The houses are being repainted, and the walls retinted. There will be a kitchenette for each house, and a laundry with electric irons and other necessary equipment. There will be no dining room, except perhaps, a common dining room in the largest of the houses, but the kitchenette will be for the use of both director and students when desired, and the laundry is also for the convenience of the girls.

Miss Heppner has a plan for a common dining room in the Barbour house farther west on B street. The building contains a room in which 100 girls could be seated at a time. If the plan is carried out, there will be tables with not more than eight or 10 at a table. Two shifts will be needed to serve the 160 girls.—Nebraska State Journal.

To Clean Kid Gloves

A practical way to clean kid gloves is to rub the soiled parts with cornmeal, moistened with gasoline. After that dry thoroughly in the air.

Another method is to dip the glove in a fruit jar partly filled with gasoline, shaking it up and down, changing the gasoline until it is clear. Of course, the gasoline must be used in the open.

Women Raise Money for League of Voters.

To raise funds for the educational work which it is doing for women electors, the Minneapolis League of Women Voters will give a country fair and garden fete at a lovely summer home on Lake Minnetonka, the afternoon and evening of August 28.

A feature of the fair will be a mock presidential election. "The Voters' League," a playlet, will be presented. A white elephant sale will be given. A special program for children will also feature the benefit.

Suede and Cloth Shoes

High boots of gray or black suede, velvet and cloth will be prominent this fall, because of the lavish use of pile fabrics in suits and coats. Lace boots seem to be in the preponderance. They are cut high, with rounding tops. The tongues are blazarre. Some are paneled or have network over the instep so as to show the stocking. Many shoe models are shown of soft black kid piped and banded with tan kid, white satin or even brown leather. Combination effects abound.
