Problems That Perplex

Answered By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

Wants Work and Home. Dear Miss Fairfax: Will you help secure a place to work where I can have my son of 12 with me. I also have a girl of 10, who is in school, and must bring her to stay with me at vacation time. I am a widow with these two dependent on my support, as my son of 17 joined the marines in July. My husband was killed as an officer nine years ago at Missouri Valley, Ia. I know all about keeping and managing a home or life on the farm. Hoping I am not asking too much, I remain, sincerely yours, MRS. G. B. I hope we shall hear from someone who has work for you and a home for you and your children. Some man living alone on a farm and needing a housekeeper would be your best prospect, it seems to me. It would be hard to take your two children into a home where there are other children. I have filed your name and address and will let you know if I have any word for you.

Cuticura Soap Imparts The Velvet Touch

HOLDING A HUSBAND

Adele Garrison's New Phase of Revelations of a Wife

The Voice That Interrupted Madge's Perfect Moment. Well! Dicky demanded after several minutes of searching for the sprays of trailing arbutus, "is your appetite for these things positively insatiable, or will you leave some for another time?" I reflected whimsically that the devotion of a husband where wild flower picking was concerned must not be too sorely taxed, so I rose to my feet promptly. "I think these will do for now," I said with a mischievous look at him. "I'll let you off this time in the hope that you'll help me again." "Sure thing," Dicky replied carelessly, and we turned toward the lake again. I found that my strength had not returned as much as I had fancied, and my steps perceptibly lagged. My husband saw this, and announced authoritatively: "Come over here and sit down." He put his hand beneath my elbow, hurried me to the rustic bench we had noted, and arranged me comfortably with my back against one of the pine tree trunks to which the bench was fastened. "You're just like a colt," he grumbled as he dropped to the carpet of pine needles beneath the trees, and stretched himself lazily. "Give your head and you run till you drop." "Don't give yourself such airs!" I retorted good naturedly. "What sort of common sense are you displaying in lying on that ground? It can't help but be damp." A Shadow Dispersed. "It's as dry as a bone," he asserted. "Remember, you're in the sunny south, my dear." "And for that very reason you ought to be careful until you're acclimated," I said didactically. "Look here!" He sat up energetically. "I didn't come out here to listen to any medical lecture. What the devil do you want to poach on mother's preserves for, anyway? She's the official wet blanket and joy-killer around this family. According to her the only safe place for man, woman or child is in bed, with the covers drawn tightly up to your chin. If you're going to begin that sort of thing, too, I'm going on a still hunt for some of the moonshine I've heard about in these parts or hereabouts." "I suppose you quite fancy that as a pun," I said with mock severity, gladly seizing any chance to turn the conversation to another angle. I felt too entirely at peace with the world to risk Dicky's being annoyed by my fussiness. After all, I reminded myself, he was a fully grown man, and if he wished to risk taking cold it was strictly his own business. But I could not repress a whimsical reflection upon the inconsistency of Dicky's resenting my solicitude for his physical welfare when he was so authoritatively exercising his for me. "It isn't a bad little thing, is it?" he replied complacently, and then we both laughed—I with relief that a shadow, even if a trifling one, had been driven away. I find, as I think every wife does, that the times when one can be completely in accord with one's husband are rare and precious; not to be married over so slightly if one can possibly help it. I was enjoying this little outing with Dicky so much that I would have done almost anything to avoid spoiling it. The Perfect Moment. I leaned back against the tree trunk and began arranging the sprays of arbutus. I became conscious that Dicky was watching me rather intently, and flushed under his scrutiny like a school girl. "Put some of those in your hair," he said abruptly. I looked at him in surprise, and my eyes dropped before something in his which made my fingers tremble as I put my hands up to my hair with the blossoms for which he had asked. It was such a glance as he used to give me in the wild, rapturous days of his whirlwind wooing. "Not that way!" He sprang to his feet and towered above me. "Here, give me those things." I weakly surrendered them, and I felt his fingers tucking the fragrant blossoms among the twists of my

Union Outfitting Company. An Opportunity for Artistic Jewel Buying. In over thirty years' conduct of a jewel business known from coast to coast, the policy of this shop has always included an understood opposition to the "sale" idea precluding the offering of so-called bargains. But now that this wonderful stock, artistically selected, and carefully kept is to be sold out, an opportunity is offered for the acquiring of exquisite jewels at prices substantially lower than those prevailing on this class of merchandise.

Don't Spoil Your Hair By Washing It. When you wash your hair, be careful what you use. Most soaps and prepared shampoo contain too much alkali, which is very injurious, as it dries the scalp and makes the hair brittle. The best thing to use is Mulsified coconut oil shampoo, for this is pure and entirely greaseless. It's very cheap and beats anything else all to pieces. You can get Mulsified at any drug store, and a few ounces will last the whole family for months. Simply moisten the hair with water and rub it in, about a teaspoonful is all that is required. It makes an abundance of rich, creamy lather, cleanses thoroughly and rinses out easily. The hair dries quickly and evenly, and is soft, fresh looking, bright, fluffy, wavy and easy to handle.
