The modishly-clad woman of the present season is more than likely to be in the no-if she is in the know. No sleeves, no back, no waist line, no skirt—almost no, at least, and underthings which are so immaterial as to be very nearly no. History, also, is quite negative, if of lace or silk.

If You Haven't Received Last Number of "Little Talks on Furniture." That delightful booklet splendidly illustrated which is published from time to time by Orchard & Wilhelm company, it will be mailed upon request. Most interesting is it this time for it contains pictures of the great pageant which was staged in this "eastern store of the west." Growing in size, picturesque in themselves, with the properly dressed people who might have just stepped out of the romance of a 100 years ago.

The what-with for making home truly home like sales are alluring, and the time is ripe for the new in-house-things—furnishings, wallpapers, floor coverings, draperies, curtains. The home has its rights and one of them is to be given added interest as the shut-in season dawns.

Woman as Old as Her Figure
"My dear boy," Balzac makes one of his characters say to another, "When you really want to tell a woman's age, look at her temples and the tip of her nose. Whatever women may achieve with their cosmetics, they can do nothing against these incorruptible witnesses to their experience. There each year of life has left its stigma. When a woman's temples are flaccid, seamed, withered in a peculiar way; when at the tip of her nose you see those minute specks, which look like the imperceptible black smuts that are shed in London by the chimneys in which coal is burned. Your servant, sir! That woman is more than 30. She may be handsome, witty, loving—whatever you please, but she is past 30, she is arriving at maturity."

Really, it is a rather diverting subject—don't you think so?

Perhaps you will agree that it is in the proportions of a woman's figure that she shows most conclusively her age, almost as conclusively as that most dreaded of snakes shows his age in the number of his rattles. At any rate, when a woman does manage to keep the upper hand in the proportion of her figure, then she certainly succeeds in appearing to be younger than she is. And it is immensely worth while, for when one contains the youthful, upright posture and this youthful proportionment of flesh the standard of health and the feeling of well-being are considerably higher.

It is so easy to grow too lean or too stout, it is so easy to neglect waiting and active exercise that keeps the flesh from accumulating below the waistline, it is so easy to settle into round shoulderedness, permitting the fat to fix itself so permanently in that droop-shouldered posture that it is quite hopeless to assume the youthful, upright posture again, or, at least, again until some of the unnecessary flesh has melted off.

And too great leanness is just as much an earmark of age. The young girl is just as often underweight, but she is usually underweight in a different way.

Gifts for the Bride Who Has Everything
"OH DEAR, whatever shall I give so-and-so for a wedding present? she has everything that I could afford to buy for her."

How often we hear these words during the year when so many of our friends are getting married! And we usually go off and buy a piece of silver or that costly far more than we should spend and probably she will receive a half dozen others just like it. It would be so much more to the point if we could make something that would be quite unique, something that no one else would even think of. One bride, who "had everything," seemed as pleased with a garden set that one of her girl friends made for her, as she did with the most expensive of her gifts. And it got more attention from the guests when they came to see the gifts than any other thing there.

In creating this lovely gift its maker must have started with the apron, which was made from a piece of cretonne covered with huge bunches of hydrangeas in wonderful shades of blue, rose and orchid. It was bound with apple green cotton tape, and in itself was a thing of beauty. With it went a hat and a pair of straw cuffs to protect the sleeves. The hat had apparently started out as one of the plain broad-brimmed straps, but it ended by looking as if it had come from the most exclusive shops on the avenue. It had been covered with one of the hat dyes that are so popular these days, a lovely apple green and then bunches of rose, blue and orchid hydrangeas had been stenciled around the brim. The ordinary straw cuffs, such as butchers wear, had been treated in the same way.

Of course, there are times in the garden when one must get on one's oldest clothes and simply grub. But there are times, too, when one just pokes about gazing over the glory of the garden, fusing a bit over this plant or that picking off the bugs, or best of all cutting the blossoms, and then it is that one appreciates such a garden outfit.

One can imagine other sets that would be every bit as lovely. For the girl whose favorite flower was the rose a rose-strewn apron and a pair pink hat with deeper pink roses would be charming. A few sets put away in the gift box would make most acceptable presents at Christmas time. An older woman would like a gray or pale lavender set with violets or lilacs. And apple blossoms would be another pretty flower to choose. There are such dainty appleblossom cretonnes, dyes that are so popular these days, that one can appreciate such a garden outfit.

Another unusual home-made gift is a bridge set made of black or white oilcloth. People who have used these covers claim that they are particularly good for the summer bridge table, as they are so cool and the cards slide about so comfortably on the glossy surface.

Cut the cloth in a square large enough to tie on over the top of an ordinary-sized card table. Cut out the corners to make it fit better, then cut all around the edges with cotton tape, leaving pieces at the four corners to tie with. The black ones should be bound with tape, the white ones can be bound in color if desired. Now buy a good-sized bridge score pad and make a cover for that also, binding it to the cloth. It is now ready to stencil. Put a gay little nosegay or basket of flowers in each corner and one on the pad cover, and the gift is finished.

Porch cushion covers made in the same way are good looking and practical.

The Best Time of the Whole Year Is Now at Hand
SEPTEMBER, October and November are the three most delightful picnic months of the whole year and to best enjoy the jaunts to beauty spots on river shore and hills, you'll want one of the picnic lunch boxes at the Omaha Printing company, Thirteenth and Farnam. You'll find their line most extensive in diversity of size, quality and design. Thermos bottles, wholier, indispensable, as an accompaniment to even a short drive may be had in substantial leather cases; handsomely finished, pleasantly priced. The shop of leather specialties of all kinds from the most practical little bag to great sturdy bags for the seasoned traveler!

A pretty dance frock of coral pink French organdie and taffeta has a string belt of light blue.

When Considering Lighting Problems
THE Nelson Electric company, one door north of the Orpheum theater, Fifteenth and Harney streets, carries a complete line of Mazda lamps for every socket in the house. Their suggestions for the best possible lighting service are excellent, indeed, with a service department which makes repairs to fixtures and appliances in a manner most pleasing. Artistic fixtures for lighting, both large and small, and appliances of exceeding merit you'll find in this shop, which extends a cordial welcome to all Ak-Sar-Ben visitors.

A white satin frock shows an apron of organdie, edged with flet lace and trimmed with insets of Irish lace. The bodice of the frock consists of an organdie foundation, trimmed with fine hand-run tucks, and with insertions of the flet and medallions of the Irish. There is a bib section of the white satin, and there is an underslip of the satin, too.

Wraps Show "Capeish" Tendencies
AMONG the new coat arrivals at the Emporium, Sixteenth, between Harney and Farnam, fashioned of brown Bolivia, there's a wrap of affair of "capeish" tendencies. Heavy hanging chenille tassels dangle from embroidered points in front and back of big sleeves, which will prove adaptable to the most gorgeous of evening gowns, while the big beaver collar will be equally lovely for afternoon or evening wear.

Woven ribbon crowns are found in some of the new hats. The ribbons used are of two shades and are woven just as we used to weave those mats of colored paper in kindergarten. The effect, if the two colors are well chosen, is very good.

There's a Haunting Melody in the Latest Synch-nations
IT'S lots of fun to drop into Ed Patton's music department of the A. Hospe Store, 1513 Douglas, and hear a merry medley of new songs, "Love Nest," "Hula Blues," "Old-Fashioned Garden" and the "Naughty Waltz" each on 35 cents, will find a 100% welcome on anyone's piano.

Long capes of Scotch plaid coating materials are being worn by French women.

Zanzibar is one of the new brown shades for autumn and it is as interesting as it sounds.

Such a Comfort—a Photo Supply Shop
SUCH as the Schmitz Photo shop in the Merritt Drug store, 311 South Sixteenth street. Here you'll find kodaks, supplies, books for mounting and a service par-excellence in the world of pictures. If it has merit, Merritt will sell.

Rugs May Be Had in Distinctive Designing, Versatile Coloring
AT PRICES to delight the conservative, if one visits the rug department of the H. R. Bowen furniture store, Sixteenth and Howard streets. Large rugs for living rooms, medium size for bedrooms, in cleverly neutral shadings, and those new-look rugs so effective for kitchen and breakfast room use. Their line of heating stoves and ranges is most complete, too, of values exceptionally pleasing, while up in the drapery department there are great, thick, lightly soft blankets in shades of vivid blue and rose, or in the more delicate colorings of gold and gray. A store preparing for your fall and winter cosiness, with an eye ever to a spending commensurate with one's purse.

Have you ever seen anything in the way of dress adornment more fascinating than the new French hand-made roses used on evening gowns? I ask you. I mean those rather large, high colored roses, in French blue, in pink and other colors such as roses might have been in some enchanted Never-Never Land. They were shown as side trim up the jaunty skirt, as wreaths around the low waist line, as bodice garniture, in a most exclusive shop.
