Camp Lewis Becomes A Lead Mining Camp

Tacoma, Wash, Sept. 15.—Mining for bullets, with the consent of the government, is now under way at Camp Lewis. A complete jig, as used in lead mining fields, has been installed, and 1,200 pounds of lead, copper and nickel are being "mined"

F. H. Lamley of Seattle decided that there was an abundance of metal back of the camp target ranges, where millions of rounds of ammunition of all kinds were -fired while troops were in training during the war.

He obtained a concession from the government on a percentage basis.

Lamley estimated that before the work is finished about November 1, a hundred tons of metal, worth $200 a ton, will be reclaimed.

Rifle and machine gun bullets, hitting embankments behind the camp targets, often do not penetrate more than an inch, it is found. Some of them go as deep as one foot. Sixty per cent of the bullets are pulverized by contact with the dirt and with other bullets, but the jig soon separates the metal particles from lighter materials.
