

Funeral for Baby Killed in Crash

Services Held for Young Victim of Automobile Accident—Mother Grief-Stricken.

Funeral services for Catherine Kerns, 8 months old, 3527 Charles street, who was killed Tuesday by an automobile driven by her father when it turned turtle at Forty-third street and Military avenue, were held late yesterday afternoon from the Gentlemen's chapel.

The fatal ride of the baby in the automobile was the child's first and only trip in a motor car. Physical injuries received by her father and mother and two small sisters received in the accident were forgotten yesterday as the little family gathered to take part in the last rites over the body of their dead baby.

The family was enroute downtown from their home when the accident occurred. Attempting to slacken the speed of the car in turning the corner at Forty-third street and Military avenue, the clutch stuck and the brake failed to work, the father said. The car lurched from the street car tracks and turned turtle twice.

The baby was pinned underneath, her head fractured and her chest crushed. She died 10 minutes later in the Methodist hospital, Helen, 3, and Theresa, 2, suffered cuts and bruises about the legs. Their parents were bruised about the body.

Burial of the little accident victim was in Holy Sepulcher cemetery.

Holding a Husband

Adele Garrison's New Phase of Revelations of a Wife

The Shock That Madge Gave Dicky.

If I had not been so keyed up with far different emotions I should have been compelled to laugh heartily at Dicky's face and manner when I flung my question concerning Grace Draper at him.

His blustering manner fell from him like a cloak suddenly swept off by an unexpected gale, and his eyes reminded me irresistibly of the saucers to which the amazed, inquiring eyes of children are so often compared.

"Then—you-know—" he said at last with astonishment in his voice. I readjusted my mental background quickly. I had meant to startle Dicky with a guess. I now had to pretend a knowledge which I had not possessed until that moment, a knowledge, moreover, which filled me with infinite dread and horror.

But not to Dicky or any other would I confess my terrified bewilderment. I braced myself to coolness of speech and action.

"Of course I know," I said with just the suspicion of a sneer in my voice. "and I am naturally curious to find out just what you should wish to come down here, and why it was necessary to throw such secrecy about her arrival. I suppose she is the 'danger' to which you and Major Grantland had alluded?"

My goading of Dicky was deliberate. I knew him well enough to realize that when he is furiously angry his tongue is loosened, and he will blurt out things which otherwise he would keep securely under guard.

His eyes flamed with anger, and he took a step toward me.

Angry and Reckless.

"There's one thing you can get out of my mind, pronto," he cried. "I don't think the girl is any more a danger than that sheep-eyed Mandy who cleans the kettles. Grantland got some fool idea in his head that she's a wolf-ess in sheep's clothing, roaming around to devour some tender little lamb like you. But if you should ask me, I think she's a plan which you evidently deem absurd."

"You're right. 'Absurd' is a mild name to apply to it, but what else was I to do? It wasn't up to me, your husband, to underrate a danger which I thought might be thought menacing and imminent, was it? It would simply be nuts for him all right, all right; if I had, but—d—n him, I don't give him that chance!"

Dicky Is Astounded.

All the jealousy and venomous dislike which Dicky's heart holds for the army officer were expressed in his tone. I should have foreborne to arouse him further, but his careless disregard of a danger which I knew Major Grantland must deem very real, made me coldly angry and reckless of consequences.

"Not all your friends share your childish and touching belief that there is no menace in Miss Draper's readiness to me," I said mockingly. "Lillian, for instance, was quite exercised over her release from prison."

"L!" The astonished monosyllable seemed to echo through the room.

"Why, how long have you known that the girl was out of prison?"

"Since the day she was released." I returned quietly, but I was seething with resentment, and I cast about blindly for some sure method of infuriating my husband. Unerringly I found it.

"Fortunately for my safety, not all our friends share your optimism concerning Miss Draper," I said smoothly. "Lillian and Allen Drake have been watching every movement of hers, and of the persons concerned in her case, ever since she was sent to prison."

More Truth Than Poetry

OVER AND OVER

O'er the fence the branches bended;
On the lowest limb
Hard green apples hung suspended,
And along came Jim.
His temptation was the great one,
Eve had long before,
So he promptly picked and ate one
Stem and skin and core.

Jim that evening ate no supper,
Not a single crumb;
There was trouble in the upper
Section of his tummy.
He did not go out to frolic
With the boys that night,
Writhed and floundered with the colic,
Faint and scared and white.

Mother in a dreadful pory
Viewed her joy and pride
Doctor came, and in a hurry
Remedies applied.
Jim felt easier toward morning,
Pains grew less severe,
Mother whispered, "That's a warning
For the little dear."

Next year came, the branches bended
Over little Jim,
Hard green apples hung suspended,
Greatly tempting him.
Did he eat another apple
Like a foolish kid,
And again with colic grapple?
Betcher life he did!

I'M THE GUY

I'M THE GUY who believes the only way to treat wives is to "treat 'em rough."

Get 'em so they're afraid of you, that's my way of handling 'em.

Get the upper hand and keep it. Never let 'em answer back or have their own way. When things don't suit you, growl, throw things around.

Let 'em bawl. Never let 'em think you're sorry. Never worry about hurting their feelings. Never let 'em think they know anything. Keep 'em busy. If they want any money make 'em ask for it and then make 'em tell you how they spent it.

If the neighbors' wives want to talk about you and call you hard names, let 'em. It's none of their business. I could tell their husbands how to handle them.

No wife of mine is ever going to consider me anything but her master. Absolutely. What else she thinks I don't care as long as she keeps it to herself. And I'll see to it that she does.

WHY?

Is the Red Sea Red?

(Copyright, 1920, by the Wheeler Syndicate, Inc.)

The name by which the Hebrews knew the Red Sea—the Yan Suph, or sea of weeds of sedge—would appear to give little indication of the reason for the title which has been applied to this body of water in later years. But, as a matter of fact, two terms have a common origin.

Unlike the "Beautiful Blue Danube," which is really a dirty yellowish brown, the Red Sea is really red—the color being due to the prevalence of a minute bright red plant, a kind of seaweed. This plant is said to be so small that 25,000,000 can live and thrive within a single cubic inch of water. Therefore, instead of being mottled with red, the sea appears in many cases, to be of a scarlet shade. A red dye, which tradition says was used hundreds of years ago, is made from this weed, but in the places where it is found, the waters of the Red Sea are as blue or green as those of any other body of water.

SLEEPY-TIME TALES

THE TALE OF RUSTY WREN

BY ARTHUR SCOTT BAILEY

CHAPTER X.

Bad News.

When Johnnie Green fastened the tin can to the tree in the dooryard he couldn't have picked out a better spot for it. Of course, he hoped that a pair of wrens would build their nest inside the syrup can. But what he never dreamed was that the cherry tree was exactly the sort of tree that wrens liked.

It was not that Rusty and his wife cared for cherries. But as soon as with blossoms, which meant that later there would be plenty of cherries.

Jolly Robin was one of those who had a taste for cherries, no matter whether they grew wild in the woods or within easy reach in Farmer Green's yard. And as soon as cherry time arrived Jolly was on hand to enjoy the treat.

He was so cheerful and good-natured that Rusty Wren and his wife did not object to Jolly's visits—so long as he did not venture too near their house. They always scolded loudly when an outsider came too close to their home, for they had a big family of children, and they couldn't help feeling that the youngsters were safer with no prying busybodies to meddle with them.

Of course, Jolly Robin never once thought of harming any of Rusty's family. And as soon as he saw that Rusty—and especially his wife—wanted him to keep away from their side of the tree he took care to respect their wishes.

At last, however, Jolly Robin made a remark one day that threw both Rusty and his wife into a flutter of alarm. Jolly Robin had not meant to frighten them. But the news was out before he realized that it was far from welcome to his two little listeners.

"Jasper Jay has heard about these cherries," he announced. "And he says he's coming over here as soon as he can find time, for he is especially fond of all kinds of cherries, no matter whether they're red cherries or black cherries or choke cherries."

Rusty Wren glanced quickly at his wife.

He could easily see that Jolly Robin's speech had upset her. And, to tell the truth, he did not himself relish the prospect of a visit from anybody as boisterous and quarrelsome as that famous bully, Jasper Jay.
