

Girls, Please Mind the Paint!

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

"To gild refined gold, to paint the lily, To throw a perfume on the violet, To smooth the ice or add another hue Unto the rainbow, or with taper-light To seek the beautous eye of heaven To garish, Is wasteful and ridiculous excess."

Now that I've quoted Shakespeare, I'd like to add the testimony of a modern man on this subject so interesting to us all—and so much in and before the public eye nowadays.

When I lift my weak feminine voice, I am sure to be greeted with a number of protesting and unintentionally amusing letters from 20-year-old miss who assures me that I know nothing of life nor yet of men.

I am assured that the thing to do is "to grab off a little fun while the going is good." Or in equally beautiful language I'm reminded that "you're only young once!" and the thing to do is enjoy yourself in spite of the stupid opinion of older people.

If only youth could be made to realize that youth is too precious to squander. If only it would believe that the time to lay up treasures is when they may be had for the taking. If it could see that "durable satisfactions" last and that the cheap and tawdry attraction of the moment does not lead anywhere. But let us ignore all the deeper questions today—and stick to our paint! Also let us cling to the voice of masculine prophecy.

With due thanks to the editor who wrote it, I quote an editorial I found among my clippings, and can not ascribe to any particular source beyond acknowledging my indebtedness to some clear-thinking and fair-minded man.

Says he who shares Shakespeare's idea and expresses it in the fashion of four centuries later:

"The male of the human species long ago discovered it was unnecessary for him to attire himself in gay colors, knee breeches and powdered wigs to attract the attention of the opposite sex. The female of the species, however, still believes that personal adornment is the important thing. Up to a certain point, of course she is right. Men like good looks, but as a matter of fact men prefer not to know how results are attained.

(Girl, please note this feminine insistence on "gilding the lily." I'm one of you, after all, you see!)

"But there is little beauty in the powder puff and rouge pot and neither is there mystery," our masculine authority goes on. "Powder that is more than visible and paint that garishly proclaims itself can add nothing to charm. A distressing phase of the matter is that the worst offenders are those who need no artificial aids to beauty. The woman who seeks to gain the appearance of youth may be excused, perhaps, but the girl who hides her youthful skin with layers of talc deserves only pity. She will need thicker powder and heavier paint a few years from now."

There's no getting away from the facts in the case. An ugly complexion won't take rouge. The red stands out in blotches. It announces its artificiality, and it doesn't brighten up, but emphasizes the ugliness it can't conceal.

A good complexion is likely to be spoiled by rouge in time. I see nothing immoral in a touch of powder to a shiny nose. Please don't misquote me as standing by the blue laws of bygone centuries and wanting to punish anyone who smooths down shine with soft dustings of clean powder. And don't fancy I condemn as wicked and terrible anyone who tints her cheek with pink or rose to give the semblance of "the bloom of youth."

It's generally done so badly. Folks who persist in making up—make up to look a bit circus-clownish. The garish and badly blended artificial colors aren't half as pretty as the

Summer Home Near Chicago Now Camp

A former summer estate of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Vanderlip at Plano, Ill., near Chicago, is now a summer camp for Chicago "teen age" girls, directed by the Y. W. C. A. of that city. It is an old mill site on the Fox river and was bought this last summer by the Chicago association. Over 800 Chicago girls spent their vacations there, living in the large mill, fishing over the dam and hiking through the country rear by. The mill house, which is an old landmark, has been left just as it stood with changes made only on the interior and any other buildings that may be put up will be in keeping with this huge old stone house. Mr. Vanderlip sold the place many years ago.

Delicately flavored vegetables should be steamed or cooked slowly in a small amount of boiling water until tender and the water boils away.

Excellent Shampoo

Shampoo your hair regularly and keep it soft and fluffy; keep your nails manicured and your skin clean and free from blemishes. Dress your hair becomingly, use powder and rouge with discretion, and, above all, do not worry, fret and fume over trifles.

Whether your hair is light or dark, you will find the following home made shampoo invaluable for cleansing and for food properties:

One egg yolk (beaten); borax, one ounce; lemon juice, one teaspoonful; alcohol, one ounce; castile soap, one cake.

Melt all together in a double boiler and a quart of hot water. This quantity will be sufficient to last for several shampooing rites.
