

Young Girl Cast Out by Rich Father

"Get Her Out of My Way," Says Parent, While Merchants Here Refuse to Prosecute.

Refuses to Pay Checks

Disowned by her father and made a victim of prosecution by his refusal to honor checks passed by her on four Omaha stores, Miss Mayme Reid, 21, daughter of Wirt Reid, wealthy merchant of Hamburg, Ia., is a victim of nervous prostration at the home of a friend Mrs. C. H. Truelock, Seventy-second and Clifton avenue.

She Bares Her Soul

"Prosecute her, do anything with her but get her out of my way," were the fiery words of Mr. Reid to Detective Pipkin over the long distance telephone Monday.

What Detective Says

According to Detective Phil Winkler's report of the affair gained from a visit to Mr. Reid at Hamburg on September 30, the girl's father "is concealing some affair in his past life."

Stopped Payment on Checks

The girl was made a victim of her father's wrath in that he suddenly stopped payment on checks for clothes that she had been allowed, she said, and in the habit of cashing during her four years of schooling at Mount St. Mary's seminary, Fifteenth and Castelar streets.

Cleveland Trounces Brooklyn

Indians Triumph Over Robins in First Game of World's Series by Score of 3 to 1.

Coveleskie Is the Star

By I. E. SANBORN.

Chicago Tribune—Omaha Bee Leased Wire. New York, Oct. 5.—By a margin too slender to be conclusive, Cleveland won the first game of the world series from Brooklyn today before a crowd which packed Ebbets' Field to the limit and numbered not less than 24,000.

The score was 3 to 1, but the two runs by which the Indians triumphed were sort of fluky and not men anything in determining the relative strength of the rival teams.

They looked to be evenly matched and a stiff wind blowing cross lots gave the Indians the break that settled the game.

Rube Robinson followed the dope by starting Rube Marquard against Cleveland, and Boss Speaker did his best to cross the southpaw by inserting three substitutes who bat right handed, into the Indian lineup.

First Score in Second. The play which decided the game occurred in the second inning, following a comical first round for both sides.

Burns was the star of the game, which looked like a cinch for Kilduff. The gale from Gowanus blew it over toward first with Pete in full cry after it. He could not get under it.

Too late to judge it, Konechky tried to take the ball. It fell safe, two or three yards from first base and just back of the base line. Burns was wise to the situation and kept on running toward second.

Konechky picked up the ball and fired it in the general direction of second base, but there was nobody covering. Kilduff was chasing the fly and Olson was asleep.

The ball traveled to the left field stands and before Whet could recover it, Burns completed the circuit and was out at Babe Ruth swat, but it returned.

Rube retired Gardner, then passed Wood and a wind-blown single by Sewell, followed by a sterling two-bagger by O'Neill, scored another run in that order, and those two returned the victory to Cleveland.

Outside of that inning the two teams broke even. Each made five safe hits and the only error was tabbed against Konechky because O'Brien failed to cover second.

One of the Brooklyn men was due to the wind because Wanby misjudged a low fly by Olson in the fourth, but it cut no figure in the result.

Pinch Hitters Used. Boss Robinson did not need to use three pinchers, because Marquard was going at top speed when he was taken out by a pinch hitter in the sixth, and Mamie stood the Indians on their heads for the two rounds he pitched before he, too, gave way to a pinch hitter, who delivered in the eighth.

That put it up to Carnegie to work in the last round and he retired the men easily. As far as his substitutes came to bat against right-handed pitchers, Speaker sent in his regulars and wound up the game with his real team.

Coveleskie worked the full route and was a stronger defensive player than he probably would have been. He hit the Robins if it had been necessary. The lone tally recorded for the home team in the seventh was due to the fact that the Indians did not play closely in the last round and he retired the men easily.

The lone tally recorded for the home team in the seventh was due to the fact that the Indians did not play closely in the last round and he retired the men easily.

Defense Strongest. The combat indicated that both teams are stronger defensively than they are on the offense. Robinson used three hurlers without in any way weakening his pitching staff.

Speaker went through with one slabman. Neither team hit the ball enough to worry the adherents of the other club.

Between two champion teams as the baseball world has come to know champions. Instead, it was a controversy between two second-rate teams whom Dame Fortune assigned to the second lowest numerical growth in 1920, and she probably will decide which one shall wear the purple toga inscribed "World's Champions."

Defensive plays of high-class were frequent. Griffith made the most difficult play when he backed up against the right field wall and speared with one hand, a long drive by Speaker in the fifth. There was nobody on at the time, but the play was a corker. Speaker retaliated by stealing a line drive hit from Krueger's bat at the start of the eighth. He had to make a shoestring catch of it while on the run, but he made it.

Each team pulled a boner. Olson should have covered second base on Burns' little fly in the second.
