

Pascale Admits He Threw Baby in River After It Was Dead

Philadelphia, Oct. 14.—District Attorney F. X. Renninger of Montgomery county today gave out the detailed confession alleged to have been written by Augusto Pasquale, "the crank" in which he told of kidnapping and smothering 13-month-old Blackley Coughlin.

The confession, as made public, says Pasquale was in the vicinity of Norristown last May to raid telephone pay stations and while walking along the road heard a baby crying, saw its mother put it to sleep and leave the room. This was the Coughlin baby, and from this incident he conceived the idea to steal the child for purposes of ransom, which he carried out with aid of a ladder a few nights later.

"I killed him by holding him too tight against my breast a little too long," the confession said. "So I took him to the river and sat there by the track with the boy on my lap until I saw daylight coming. Then, not daring to hold him any longer, I tied him with a string to a piece of rail. Then I threw him in the river."

The confession said Pasquale had to wait until the newspaper came out with the story of the kidnapping before he could learn the name of the child's parents and write a letter to them for money.

SLEEPY-TIME TALES THE TALE OF PADDY MUSKRAT BY ARTHUR SCOTT BAILEY

CHAPTER XI. Seeing the Doctor. For some time Paddy Muskrat had not been feeling well. Whenever he swam far he would have to stop and float on the water, in order to catch his breath. And he was not able to swim so fast as he could once.

As soon as Mrs. Paddy noticed those things she began to worry. And she said to Paddy that at last Paddy agreed to see a doctor. "Good!" Mrs. Paddy exclaimed. "You must go over to see Aunt Polly Woodchuck, at her house under the hill. And I'll go with you, because "He needs work. He's fat!" I can't wait to find out what she says. Whatever your trouble may be, I hope she'll have some herb that will help you.

So off they started. And several times, on the way, Paddy Muskrat panted so hard that they had to stop until he caught his breath again. Luckily they found old Aunt Polly at home. She put on two pairs of spectacles and looked at Paddy Muskrat closely.

"Do you feel tired after you've swum a long way?" she asked him. "Yes!" Paddy said. "I thought as much," Aunt Polly remarked. "And do you like floating better than swimming?"

"Paddy Muskrat admitted that he did. "Just as I supposed!" said Aunt Polly Woodchuck. "I know what the matter with your husband," she told Mrs. Paddy. "He needs work. He's too fat."

"Dear me!" Mrs. Paddy exclaimed, had never gone to see Aunt Polly

What Rita Brown Told Leila Fairfax.

"Hello, Leila!" Rita Brown came into the room where Leila Fairfax rested against her pillows with as debonair and carefree a manner as if she were going to pay the most casual afternoon call.

"I thought I'd better not disturb him," Paddy told his wife. "Well, the next day Paddy remarked that he expected to start sawing wood the following morning. But Mrs. Paddy made him begin at once."

"If you get any fatter," she said, "you won't be able to crawl inside the house."

"Oh, Rita!" Leila fairly gasped the words, "Madge says—"

"Please spare me that!" The girl whom we had known so long as Rita Brown flung out her hands, palms turned outward as if she were repelling something loathsome.

"You're a queer kind of medicine," Paddy Muskrat grumbled. "But Mrs. Paddy paid no attention to his remark."

"I'll see that he follows your advice," she promised Aunt Polly Woodchuck.

Now, Paddy Muskrat did not like to saw wood. And he wished he with him and heard what Aunt Polly said, he never would have taken her advice. But in order to have every thing pleasant at home Paddy finally promised Mrs. Paddy that he would try to do just as Aunt Polly suggested.

"There's just one thing that may prevent my sawing wood," he said. "You know I have no saw."

"I'm sure Farmer Green would be glad to let you use one of his," Mrs. Paddy told him. And that night Paddy went over to the farmhouse He found that Farmer Green was abed and asleep; so he just took a saw which he found in the barn, without waking Johnnie Green's father.

"I thought I'd better not disturb him," Paddy told his wife. "Well, the next day Paddy remarked that he expected to start sawing wood the following morning. But Mrs. Paddy made him begin at once."

"If you get any fatter," she said, "you won't be able to crawl inside the house."
