

Sticks to Story Killing of Lover Was Accidental

Married Woman on Trial for Murder Expresses Desire To Live for Husband And Children.

By Universal Service.
Norwich, Conn., Oct. 20.—Living in a shadow world of romance, its sorrows, its joys and tragedies hugged to her heart until a time came when middle age and the accusation of crime, for which she may pay with her life, are crowded upon her, Mrs. Mabel Kenyon still clings to the days filled with love and is troubled and confused when her attention is taxed with the shooting of her lover.

Under the insistent hammering of the state's attorney today in the superior court here where she is on trial charged with the murder of Mr. Herbert Tetlow, Mrs. Kenyon could not be made to swerve from her story told on direct examination. This story was that the shooting was accidental and caused by the struggle over the revolver which she meant to kill herself in the presence of the doctor, who for five years had been her lover.

Wept On Stand.
All day Mrs. Kenyon alone held the court's attention. Only once did her fortune leave her and she wept so that the prosecuting attorney offered to excuse her if she was weary. Her quick retort was that she was still strong and only begged him to put his questions plainly so that she would understand.

Mr. Kenyon, her husband, a gray haired, tired looking man, thin, quiet, his sparse hair neatly brushed across his head, sat bowed and silent throughout the day. Beside him sat the three sons of Mrs. Kenyon, slender youths, the youngest in knickerbockers.

Married Three Times.
Mrs. Kenyon, dressed in a trim mouse colored taffeta and Georgette dress, a black wolf scarf about her shoulders, her straight gray hair pulled tight and low across her forehead and held in place by a pin of brilliant, told again the story of her life. Two crimson spots burned on her cheeks all day.

She told of her three marriages, of her love for Dr. Tetlow and her intimacy with him.

Mrs. Kenyon told how she held keys to all the doors of the doctor's apartment for a long time. She dwelt tenderly on the recital of hours spent in the garden with her lover, her head bowed in shame or lifted in triumph as the narrative developed.

She spoke of the rendezvous in the doctor's apartment as "our room."
"Oh, I remember so many things about that room," she said. "I used to go there when I was tired to be alone. I went often when the doctor was not there. I would sit for hours, thinking, reading, mending his clothes, doing little services for him. We sometimes read aloud together. If we came to a word we did not know we looked it up in the dictionary. Mr. Tetlow was a man of wide culture and charming manner."
"Why did you make up your mind that you must see him no more?" she was asked.

"I was suffering and exhausted," she said, "nervously and physically. I was at the breaking point. I could not go on. I could not stand his constant complaining and bickering, his fault finding with the chickens, the garden, the yard, everything about the place just as though it were his. Yet I did not want to hurt him."
"Why need you have insisted that he go far away, to Oklahoma, as you suggested?"

"There is an intellectual and spiritual relationship between a man and a woman who love that is binding and as old as the world. It was against this bond that we struggled. As long as we lived near each other the struggle would be in vain."

Mrs. Kenyon said she visited Dr. Tetlow's apartment four times the day of the shooting. The first time she called for a towel, the second time to talk to him, the third time with the gun with which she intended killing herself and the last time she described in detail just as she had put in her direct testimony. The shooting was accidental, she said. She never intended killing him. She loved him too much.

fight," said Mrs. Kenyon. "Not for myself. What is left of life for me? But for my loyal husband, for my four adoring boys. I must carry on and face the life before me with courage."

"My dear husband, his home wrecked, his heart broken, has told me I must be steadfast. He is ready to take up the journey again with me, a new life, a life we shall live for each other and our children, shutting the past from our hearts."

Hoover Advocates Deep Sea Waterway From Lakes to Ocean

New York, Oct. 20.—American exportation of wheat will cease within 10 years, unless better transportation facilities from the interior are provided, Herbert Hoover declared here today at a hearing before the international joint commission, advocating the proposed deep sea waterways from the Great Lakes through the St. Lawrence river.

Mr. Hoover said the proposed waterway would mean a saving of at least 10 cents per bushel on export wheat and that this saving would go into the pockets of the American farmer and result in greater production. The former food administrator likened opposition to the waterway as similar to opposition to labor-saving machinery.

Arguments in favor of the waterway also were made by William C. Redfield, former secretary of commerce, and Julius H. Barnes.

Painless Dentistry

DR. G. D. SHIPPERD,
Vice Pres. & Gen. Mgr.

Painless dentistry was advertised by unscrupulous dentists years before it was achieved, and for this reason we hesitate to mention it. We, however, will make this statement: that by the use of remedies recently discovered, and by the latest appliances introduced, truly modern dentistry is practically without pain.
