Problems That Perplex

Answered By
BEATRICE FAIRFAX

A Case for Time.
Dear Miss Fairfax, Omaha Bee: Three years ago I met a young man to whom I was attracted; through certain circumstances we did not meet again until last winter, when we started going out together. As I am only 18 and he is 21, we decided to marry in two or three years. There was no definite engagement, but I was no longer interested in other friends and dropped most of them. Now he finds that he has a mother and sister who are very much attached to him and would not be able to offer me anything substantial for a long time. He wants me to go about and meet other people and not to consider myself in any way bound to him. He says that if ever he has anything to offer he will come to me; in the meanwhile I am to treat him as one of my friends. This, I realize, is very honorable of him, but I am not at all crazy about getting married, nor am I interested in anyone else, and he says that if someone who can offer me anything should come along I should feel perfectly free to accept. I am interested in my work and would not mind how long I had to wait. Just what do you think of the situation?
P. P. A.

Be a Good Sport.
Dear Miss Fairfax, Omaha Bee: I met a young man about a year ago with my girl friend and her sweet heart. We went out in a party of four to several dances, theaters and places of amusement, and this young man, who always escorted me, acted as though he cared for me until another girl friend started going around with us.

Whenever she sees this young man she comes and tells me, and when we are out together she forces herself on him in an absurd manner. We are all about 18, and do you think she ought to have a little more respect about her to know what she is doing? Will you tell me what to do?
JAYBEE.

Be a "good sport" my dear. Use this in the sense in which the English employ when talking of athletic games—in which they are not only fair and clean. Don't let the other girl nag you, don't let yourself grow irritable and so most unattractive. Play the game. You're young and needn't take any one seriously. If good temper and sweetness won't hold the boy, at least they will get you into a fine habit. I wouldn't take her too seriously. Laugh good naturedly at the whole situation and don't flatter the lad by letting him realize that he's a bone of contention.
