

Omahan Returns After Escaping Greek War Draft

John Rogers, Confectioner Here, Ticked to Be Back—Reports Steve Abriotes Married in Greece.

John Rogers, proprietor of the Rogers confectionery, Twenty-fourth and Farnam streets, arrived in Omaha yesterday after nearly being drafted into the Greek army while visiting his native land to close up the estate of his father.

When Rogers finally succeeded in getting aboard a boat he found that men rated as millionaires were congratulating themselves on getting on board as steerage passengers, he said.

Abriotes Is Married. Rogers brought back word that Steve Abriotes, one of the proprietors of the Olympia candy kitchen here, who crossed over with him, has married a doctor's pretty daughter he met while visiting relatives in the town of his birth.

George Seletos, proprietor of the Palace pool hall on Douglas street, the third of Rogers' fellow voyagers en route to Greece, visited his parents and other relatives in Greece and is expected to return to Omaha with Abriotes and his bride.

Cost of Living High. Rogers found the cost of living in Greece higher than in the United States. A meal costs 15 drachmas or about $3, while an ordinary suit of clothes costs 550 drachmas or $183, he said.

Nearly Drafted. Rogers and his two companions were nearly drafted into the army in Greece under an arrangement between England and the United States and Greece, whereby Greeks who have taken out naturalization papers since 1913 may be put into the army on return to Greece.

Greece, especially Athens, is crowded with a foreign floating population, including many members of the nobility from Russia and Turkey, and refugees from other countries such as Serbia, Rogers said.

Motors Through Naples. Rogers spent a day motoring through Naples while stopping at that port after sailing from Piraeus, the seaport of Athens, September 30. Here there was every evidence of want and near starvation, he said.

Rogers landed in New York after a stormy voyage of 27 days. "Gosh, but this country looks good to me!" he exclaimed thankfully yesterday.

Rogers brought his brother, Theodore, with him. Theodore knows no English. He will take up a course at the Y. M. C. A.

Rogers has grown a mustache. His little boy, Michael John, 4, failed to recognize him on his return.
