Former Bankers' Head Married Fifty Years

George F. Sawyer.

Western Honors Pioneer Banker

Airplane Brings Felicitations
To Golden Wedding of Mr.
And Mrs. G. F. Sawyer.

Western, Neb., Nov. 6.—(Special.)—Following the same path that had been used by George F. Sawyer a half century before, when the latter, a penniless cripple, almost starved had returned to his home here, after a fruitless quest for work at Lincoln, an airship bore from the capital city, the congratulations and felicitations of the banks of Lincoln to Mr. and Mrs. Sawyer on their golden wedding.

Friday was the anniversary of the event and business was suspended in Western and the township in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Sawyer. Over a thousand guests from all parts of the state were present to help celebrate. Some of them came in old-fashioned lumber wagons with board seats, others in buggies of ancient vintage, others in automobiles of democratic and aristocratic make, some on trains, and a few on airships.

Gala Day in Western.
It was the biggest day that has occurred in that thrifty Saline county town in many years.

The opera house was jammed with people and hundreds were compelled to remain outside on the streets. A free moving picture show, featuring married life, was given and interspersed old-time songs and reminiscences.

George F. Sawyer, president of the Saline State bank, and former president of the Nebraska State Bankers' association, told of his experiences in a pioneer day, and the hardships and struggles that he and his Quaker bride had to undergo in establishing a home.

A daughter, Mrs. A. J. Storms of Auburn, sang the favorite songs of her parents, "When You and I Were Young, Maggie" and "Fiddle and L." W. C. Hughes, secretary of the Nebraska State Bankers' association, made a speech of felicitation, and former Attorney General George W. Hastings of Crete, a life-long friend of Mr. and Mrs. Sawyer, eulogized them and the usefulness and success of their lives, and related many touching incidents of early day hardships.

Airplane From Lincoln.

There were several persons in the audience who had been pupils of Mr. and Mrs. Sawyer when the latter taught schools in Saline county 50 years ago. Every member of the Sawyer family and all of the grandchildren were at the gathering. During the program an airship landed in the town, and the aviators bore to the hall, where the celebration took place, the greetings and felicitations of the First National bank of Lincoln. Charles F. Brinkman, assistant cashier, represented the United States National bank of Omaha. All of the bankers of Saline county and many from Jefferson and Gage counties were in attendance.

Luncheon was served to the crowd by the sons and sons-in-law of Mr. Sawyer. The citizens of Western, despite the prohibition of gifts, presented Mr. Sawyer with a gold-headed ebony cane, and Mrs. Sawyer a gold and pearl-handled umbrella. These were concealed in a great mass of yellow chrysanthemums, and the presentation was made by General Hastings.

Too Much 'Caliban' In Modern Life, Says Speaker

Woman Tells Drama League That People's Desires Are Material Things.

"It is a great thing to have the brain to build a system of railways, and make the powers of nature serve us," said Miss Kate McHugh, speaking before the Omaha Drama League Saturday afternoon at the Fontenelle hotel. "But the question is, what are we doing with the time saved?" Miss McHugh is honorary president of the Drama League and her Saturday lecture was the only number she will give before the organization this year. Mrs. E. M. Siefert, president, presented Miss McHugh. A handsome basket bouquet of pink, yellow and white hutton chrysanthemums adorned the speaker's table and were presented to her at the close of the lecture.

"Caliban" Discussed.
"Caliban in English Literature" was the subject of the lecture. Caliban, symbolizing the material, whether found in the primitive or in the modern man, has been presented in literature in the pure drama, the dramatic monologue in masque form and through the novel. "Shakespeare in The Tempest gave us the first Caliban," said Miss McHugh. The characters, Prospero and Caliban are interwoven in the Shakespearean drama, Prospero symbolizing the spiritual or higher nature and Caliban the material.

Browning turned to this symbolic character to show the growth of religious faith in primitive man. Percy Mackaye used the type to emphasize the part played by the drama in the development of the race.

Too Much "Up-to-Datens."
"Caliban," a novel by W. L. George who will lecture in Omaha next Thursday, gave Miss McHugh opportunity to briefly review the book, which she did to the delight of her audience. Bulmer, the central figure, was interested in life, not life's meaning, according to the speaker. "The significance of life did not interest him."

In summing up, the lecturer indicated that there is too much "Caliban" in modern life. "We want money chiefly for things that are physical. In the world today, the greatest minds are bent on things material, such as houses, automobiles, greater speed and development of all the forces of nature. What are we reading? The classics can almost be defined as something everybody praises but nobody reads. Even our schools are being up-to-date. Economics and scientific subjects are crowding out literature, and literature classes are taking up the modern writers. We need more of Prospero to release from Caliban."

Love Triumphs Over Nunnery in Case of Girl Who Is in Convent

Philadelphia, Pa., Nov. 6.—Love has triumphed over renunciation in the case of Miss Marion M. Wood, daughter of Edwin Randolph Wood, candidate for president in the September primaries.

After having decided to renounce the world and seek solitude in a nunnery Miss Wood abandoned this intention after three days in a convent in Jamaica. She admitted to the mother superior that her route to her retreat she lost her heart to a dashing Cuban and in consequence desired to return to the gay world she had left behind.

The man whose captivating manners had caused the Philadelphia heiress to forget her vows of renunciation is Marcel Diaz, an electrician, who follows the sea for a living. Miss Wood says she met Diaz in Santiago, Cuba, when she left the steamship Tivives to tour the city.

Becoming lost in Santiago, the bewildered girl approached a stranger there and asked to be directed to her hotel. The man appealed to, says Miss Wood, was of dark complexion and handsome. He displayed such courtesy and seemed so interested in her predicament, that she readily accepted his invitation to view the sights of the city in a motor car. During the ride, Miss Wood avers, she lost her heart completely to the gentlemanly and soft-speaking Cuban.

Wealthy Wellesley Girls Do College Servant Work

Wellesley, Mass., Nov. 6.—Wellesley girls are receiving a first-hand introduction to the servant problem. The academic atmosphere, or the lack of movies, or restrictions about callers, may be responsible. Anyway, the college is having great difficulty in procuring housemaids and waitresses.

But the students have met the situation. In Tower court 10 college girls, many of whom would not even open the front door at home, have volunteered to wait on the table and assist the few maids left. As an inducement to housemaids Wellesley is offering special classes in art, music, or any subject they desire.
