

Prospects For Bonus Not Good

Republican Leaders of Opinion Congress Will Refuse Added Compensation to Ex-Soldiers.

Country Against the Plan

Chicago Tribune—Omaha Bee Leased Wire. Washington, Nov. 7.—Republican leaders of congress are of the opinion that despite the adoption of a referendum favoring cash bonuses to ex-service men by New York, New Jersey and Wisconsin, the next congress, on the ground of economy, will refuse to grant them through federal legislation.

Country Against Plan

Those who have participated to any great extent in the campaign say that they find that the sentiment of the country is against cash bonuses, but favors the country doing everything possible in the way of rehabilitation or vocational training for wounded soldiers.

Count on Fordney

The American Legion is counting on Representative Fordney, chairman of the ways and means committee, to lead the fight for bonuses in the next session as he did in the last. While three strong advocates of bonuses were defeated, it is pointed out that the bonus measure which they gained nine ex-service men in the election, among them being Hamilton Fish, jr., of New York, and Lewis Fronghiam, of Massachusetts. It is not known whether the nine veterans of the world war will support cash bonuses.

Harsher Armistice Terms Opposed By Gen. Haig, Lloyd George and Foch

Real Inside Information on Peace Terms With Germany Given in Editorial in Paris Publication.

By HENRY WALES. New York Times—Chicago Tribune Cable, Copyright 1920. Paris, Nov. 8.—Andrie Tardieu in L'Excelsior, in an editorial describing the armistice negotiations, reveals that it was not President Wilson, Colonel House, Gen. Bliss or Gen. Pershing who insisted that hostilities should end as soon as Germany accepted the 14 points, but that Sir Douglas Haig, Mr. Lloyd George and Generalissimo Foch himself argued against the armistice terms being made so harsh that the Germans might reject them.

Gen. Bliss, the article states, proposed that the armistice contain these two clauses—total disarmament and complete demobilization. Gen. Foch objected bitterly when Admiral Jellicoe insisted upon the surrender of the German fleet, asserting that this was only a sop to the public, and Mr. Lloyd George warned the naval members not to push Germany too far.

Divergence Over Clauses

Gen. Foch summoned Gen. Petain, Sir Douglas Haig and Gen. Pershing to Sentis on October 25, and asked them what they thought of an armistice. No one proposed refusal of the German proposal, but divergence was found over the clauses. Gen. Haig spoke first.

"It is necessary to conclude an armistice under the most moderate conditions," he said. "The victorious allied armies are exhausted. Our various units must be reformed and Germany is not a broken military power. During the last few weeks their armies have retired in the best of order, fighting bravely."

Urged Disarmament

"Thereupon Gen. Petain said: "It is necessary to achieve this. There must be complete assurance that the enemy is prevented from recommencing the war. The German army must return to Germany without a single cannon or tank, with only their side arms. I suggest as a practical method of achieving this assurance, the fixing of a short evacuation term to prevent the enemy from carting off war material and a provision that the allies shall occupy the left bank of the Rhine and a zone 50 kilometers deep on the right bank. At the same time we must demand 1,000 locomotives and 100,000 freight cars."
