

Gay Americans' Style of Dress Shocks Chinese

Native Maidens Horrified at Exposure of Anatomy of Women in Evening Gowns.

By FREDERICK A. SMITH. Chicago Tribune-Omaha Bee Foreign News Service.

Peking, Nov. 6.—Visitors in Peking during the recent gun-fed political overturn expected they would find the members of the foreign colonies in the Chinese capital sadly distressed and rolling their eyes and saying little, quick prayers. But those visitors who tiptoed into Peking, feeling as if they were intruding upon a stricken family's private devotions, were instantly reassured by the twang of tennis racquets and the purr of motors and the murmur of calm conversation and by the jazzy music of the fox trot.

Sitting on the roof garden of Peking's leading hotel, where soft lights gleamed through the oyster blossoms and twinkled amid the foliage of the natural grape arbors, it was easy to see that what the European and American population needed and wanted in Peking was not sympathy, but some more of the same in a tall glass. And was it not too bad the eight-piece stringed instrument orchestra had played only three encores for the last waltz? For this dance the lights had been switched off and the foreign colony gilded dreamily over the floor of polished concrete with only the silvery moon to light.

So this is Peking! But not by any manner of peradventure is this China. If it were China, then Chinese gentlemen would not bring their families to sit at the tables and gaze wide-eyed at the funny foreigners and their funny ways. The Chinese ladies and their daughters were without exception sedately attired in conventional native costume. Their raincoats were of rich brocaded silk, and they wore pearls and diamonds and bits of jade of impressive luster and rare quality. But their simple skirts were long enough to almost touch their dainty slippers and the little waists they wore were long in sleeve and the collars were most fetchingly frogged about the neck. Their black hair was combed back smoothly from the temples and knotted demurely at the nape of the neck.

But why did one imagine he detected on their bright faces an expression verging on polite disapproval of the foreign ladies? Possibly it was because some of the white women from the lands of civilization and propriety wore gowns which were quite nominal for and aft above the waist. Some of the skirts had that combined Paris-Petrograd style which caused them to twinkle about the knees instead of about the ankles. To a Chinese debutante who had been reared to believe it immodest even to expose her wrists in the presence of gentlemen it must have

Society Gossips In England Pick Wives for Prince

Heir to Throne Old Enough To Settle Down So English Matrons Begin Making Guesses.

(Chicago Tribune-Omaha Bee Foreign News Service.)

London, Nov. 13.—Society gossips in London are busy trying to find a wife for the Prince of Wales. A recent issue of the Times devoted its leading editorial to the subject of the marriage of the heir to the throne, suggesting that the time has come for him to choose a wife and hoping that the choice will be his own and that it will fall on an English girl.

In official circles it is declared that there is no immediate significance in this, but it is known the king and queen also feel it is time the prince, who is 26, was married and secured in his succession to the throne. The favorite among London gossips is Lady Joan Muhlolland, lady-in-waiting to Princess Mary and sister of Lord Stafford. She is 30, a widowed, and one of the prettiest women at court. The match would be very popular in England.

Second choice is one of the daughters of the Duke of Devonshire, vicerey of Canada, Lady Dorothy, the eldest, is 20. The prince is said to have paid her attention during his recent trip in Canada.

An English marriage would be extremely popular among the English people, who are tired of foreign gossips. There is nothing in British law, nor is there a house law like that of the German royal houses, prescribing a royal spouse for the heir to the throne. Before the German kings came to England many of the English kings married commoners.

Business Men of Mexico Kick on Freight Tiemp

Mexico City, Mexico, Nov. 13.—Business men here are complaining because the railroads are unable to handle the flood of freight entering and going out of Mexico. They say that the poor service is a serious handicap to Mexico's industries, farms and business establishments. Much of the rolling stock of the railroads was burned during the revolutions and the lines are hard pressed in the matter of supplying cars.

Wife Says Engineer Always Carried Booze in Engine

Denver, Nov. 13.—Alvin Pierce, Colorado and Southern railroad engineer, operated a "booze special" between Cheyenne, Wyo., and Denver, according to charges made by his wife in a divorce suit here. Mrs. Pierce declares that her husband stocked his engine cab with whisky and made regular "bootleg trips" from the Wyoming capital to this city.

Heart Secrets of a Fortune Teller

By RACHEL MACK. A Quest for Beauty.

There walks into my studio recently, a young lady who's sufficiently plump to bear the fatal label of corned. Somehow she made you think of pink checked sunbonnets and shady lanes with tinklin' cow bells fillin' the air, and all that sort of thing. She would have looked rare with the sweet rural stage setting and the rustic scenery, but when you get right down to brass tacks and compared with a regulation fashion model she was easy 15 pounds to the heavy.

"Greetings, dearie," I says, feelin' quite cheerful after my 4 o'clock tea, which I generally manage to snatch between readings. "What's the program? Love worried?"

"You have guessed, Madam Clariss," she says. "I am very unhappy and I need your help."

"You'll get it, dearie," I promise. "Proceed with the facts in the case."

"Well," she acknowledges, "the whole trouble hinges on my being too fat!"

"Nonsense, dearie," I says. "We can't all pose as models for the Redfern slims."

"Of course not," she agrees. "I used to be indifferent to the extra pounds, too, but lately—well lately I've begun to worry about my figure."

"I want to be like the match-shaping ladies in the fashion magazines."

"Aha!" I exclaims. "Explain no more, my child. I see the whole plot as clear as if I was gazin' in the mystic crystal!"

"Sure!" I answered. "A certain young man whom you greatly admire prefers slim-patterns in feminine figures! Am I right?"

"You are," she acknowledges. "I learned the truth the night that Jack almost proposed to me. He told me he had fallen for me, and what a queen he thought I was. And just when he was on the point of asking me to marry him, he stopped dead short and put the most surprising question to me."

"Yes, yes, girlie, go on with the story. What was the question that caused the nervous shock?"

"He asked me," she says slowly, and blushing with mortification, "why I didn't try to reduce!"

"So you started in to train down. I ask, 'without losin' a minute's time?'"

"I did," she says. "I collected all the literature going on how to reduce, and I studied it like an Arab studies the Koran, for two days and nights."

"And what were the results, girlie?" I ask much interested.

"The results," she says, very gloomy, "were a half pound lost. I found that out by consultin' the scales, not the mirror. It couldn't be detected with the naked eye."

"And what, next?" I inquired.

"Well, the following month I starved myself. I ate food on the order of gold fish flakes and canary bird seed. For breakfast, I treated myself to three crackers and a half glass of milk, diluted with a weak solution of barley water. That was my heavy meal!"

"Wonderful diet," I says. "Did you lose weight on it?"

"I did," she answers. "Four pounds and a half in six weeks. Congratulations!" I exclaims. "Not so soon!" I says. "The following week I was so hungry that I returned to regular diet and gained back three pounds."

Learning to Golf

By JAMES J. MONTAGUE.

After my friends had watched me play golf for part of a game they began to give me advice.

This advice was given me not while I was walking across the fair way where I might have pondered it and profited by it the next time I tried to hit the ball.

It was given on the tee, just as I was about to hit the ball. And it always began with "don't!"

I may be wrong, but I think there have been several times in my life when I might have hit the ball, and knocked it perhaps 50 yards if somebody hadn't said don't just as my club was descending toward it.

Still I was eager for advice, for I knew that I needed it. Most big winning golfers need it, but I doubt if there was ever one who needed it as much as I did.

I tried to act on it every time it was given me, and even when two or three people gave me different kinds of advice at the same time.

The results were not good. In time I got so that I would think of

"I ain't never cheated nobody yet."
