Tennyson's Estimate of The Poets

It may not be out of place if I give here some of my father's criticism on poets. I put down a few random notes of his sayings at this time and at other times on the subject.

Chapman was to him a kindred spirit, as a lover of nature and as a word-painter of character; and he enjoyed reading him aloud more than any poet except Shakespeare and Milton.

When he talked of the "grand style" of poetic diction he would emphasize his opinion that he considered that of Milton even finer than that of Virgil, the lord of languages. "Verse" should be "back comme la prose."

"Browning," he said, "never greatly cares about the glory of words or beauty of form; he has told me that the world must take him as it finds him. As for his obscurity in his great imaginative analyses, I believe it is a mistake to explain poetry too much, felicity in the adaptation of words to ideas and feelings. I wish I had written his two lines:

"The little more and how much it is, The little less and what worlds away?"

He has plenty of music in him, but he cannot get it out. . . . Among modern sonnets he liked some of Rossetti's, Mrs. Browning's "Sonnets from the Portuguese," and Charles Turner's. For Christina Rossetti, as a true artist, he expressed profound respect.

Of Shelley he said: "He is often too much in the clouds for me. I admire his 'Alastor,' 'Adonais,' 'Prometheus Unbound,' and 'Epipsychidion,' and some of his short lyrics are exquisite. As for 'The Lover's Tale,' that was written before I had ever seen a Shelley, though it is called 'Shelleyan.'"

Of Spenser he said: "He is a read through which all things blow into music. . . . Keats he placed on a lofty pinnacle. . . . There is something of the innermost soul of poetry in almost everything he ever wrote."

"If the beginning of 'Hyperion,' as now published, were shorter," he said, "it would be a deal finer; that is, if from 'Not so much' to 'feathered grass' were omitted."

He felt what Cowper calls the "musical fitness" of Pope, and admired single lines and couplets very much; but he found the "regular da, da, da" of his heroic metre monotonous. . . . He liked Crabbe much, and thought that there was great force in his homely tragic stories: "He

What's What

In the illustrated group of spectators at a northern variety foot ball game one of the alumni has just been introduced to a visitor from Virginia. With the ceremonious courtesy which southerners abate only after long residence in Yankee-land, the Virginian has doffed his hat in acknowledgment and so young Mr. Harvard can do no less than follow suit, although in the north it is not the general custom for men to remove their hats when presented to other men of their own age.

Casual meetings on the street do not call for introductions. If a man accompanies one of two men who exchange greetings he tips his hat as the groups part. It is only when the conversation is prolonged that presentation becomes expedient, if only to avoid awkwardness. In such a case either of the new acquaintances may or may not choose to recognize the other afterward, since both understand that the introduction is merely accidental. On the other hand, a presentation such as that illustrated is wholly of choice, and thus is more likely to lead to real friendship.

has a world of his own. There is a 'tramp, tramp, tramp,' a merciless alderman hammer thud about his lines which suits his subjects. And in speaking of him he would cite Byron's 'Nature's sternest painter yet the best.'

In early boyhood he had been possessed by Byron's poetry, but he could not read it in later life, except perhaps 'The Vision of Judgment,' and parts of 'Childe Harold,' and of 'Don Juan.' He would say: 'Byron is not an artist or a thinker, or a creator in the higher sense, but a strong personality; he is endlessly clever, and is now unduly depreciated.'

"One must distinguish," he would add, "Keats, Shelley, and Byron from the great sage poets. . . . who are both great thinkers and great artists, like Aeschylus, Shakespeare, Dante and Goethe—'Alfred, Lord Tennyson,' by his son.

Chicago Opera. The Chicago opera began its operations for the season by presenting Mascagni's "Cavalleria Rusticana" and Leoncavallo's "Pagliacci" at the Babst theater, Milwaukee, on October 18. This performance was the first of a series which constituted the preliminary tour of the organization, a tour which comprised visits to Springfield, Ill.; Des Moines and Sioux City, Ia.; Sioux Falls, S. D.; and St. Paul, Minn. The medal awarded to chaplains of the United States army, navy and marine corps by the general war-time commission of the churches and the federal council of the Church of Christ in America, was designed by a woman, Mrs. Laura Gardin Fraser.

A Sale Unique. In a business experience covering over forty years, this is the first time the Edholm Jewel Shop has ever considered a sale, for it has been distinctly at variance with the policy of this conservative store to talk "cut prices." But the time has come for a sale offering and this stock pronounced the cleanest, the most exquisite of jewel showings by men who know jewel salesmen who travel from coast to coast, is being offered in a "showing out sale" unusual in the history of jewel sales.
