Squads East, Keith!

And now the army's looking for Keith Collins. Colonel Cavanaugh, recruiting officer, said yesterday Keith got his victory Medal here August 22. He was awarded no clasp, meaning he saw no service outside the United States.

The colonel's records show Keith was a private attached to the headquarters division of the First Cavalry Squadron, Carlstrom Field, Florida. He won't be prosecuted for parading as an officer, because the army, if it finds him, will let the Postoffice department have him first.

As he answered, one of the men struck him over the head with a club, he told Bluffs police, and then the men fled. Keith, after binding and gagging him, left him in his car to die. They set the car afire and fled, he declared.

The preacher said he recovered consciousness, saw his machine in flames, rolled himself from the seat and out the front door to the ground and safety.

Small boys nearby, he said, freed him of his bonds and assisted him by calling the fire department, which extinguished the flames.

With eight prisoners in the county jail in Council Bluffs, under heavy armed guards, postoffice officials and federal agents redoubled their efforts yesterday to the task of hunting out further loot taken from the registered mail car in the robbery November 13.

Bonds especially are being sought. The agents believe there is a considerable amount of untraced securities hidden in Council Bluffs. They say the prisoners continue to speak of "good and bad bonds," referring, they figure, to cancelled and negotiable securities.

They believe the robbers segregated the bonds and securities in two lots, burning the cancelled bonds and hiding the negotiable securities. Practically none of the negotiable securities has been recovered.

Cause for the heavily armed guard stationed about the county jail since Sunday morning was revealed yesterday.

The guard was posted following a scare Saturday night that friends of the prisoners might make an attempt to free the men now held.

Mystery Auto Appears. An automobile was seen loitering in the vicinity of the jail after midnight.

Engineer, Asleep at Post, Responsible for U. P. Freight Wreck

Columbus, Neb., Nov. 23.—(Special Telegram.)—An investigation of the Union Pacific freight rear-end collision here Sunday morning, in which an engine was destroyed, two cars burned and two other cars demolished, has disclosed that Engineer Dan Murphy on the train that crashed into the one ahead was asleep at his post. He admitted this and said he only awakened as the crash came.

Fireman Austin was in the gangway stoking the engine and he and brakeman Walters jumped. Murphy rode into the wreck, and sat in his cab dazed, but uninjured, after the engine caught fire. The fireman and brakeman had jumped on his side of the train and ran forward to the burning engine cab and pulled the engineer out.

The property was a complete wreck, and the engine's loss is estimated at $40,000. The three trainmen were summarily discharged.

The accident occurred on a long stretch of straight track, and the crew responsible for the wreck ran past two block signals set against them.
