Is Brilliant Girl Going Out of Style?

Ten or 15 years ago the most flattering thing one woman could say of another was to remark that she was "such a nice, quiet girl."

What's What By HELEN DECIE

At home, a diner may decline any food served; but when visiting, whether waited upon by hired attendants or enjoying the newly revived ent help-famine, a portion from each dish passed should be conveyed to the plate. No one notices—no one should notice—during the progress

Doctor Tells How to self-service resultant from the presis eaten, but nobody can avoid no-ticing the refusal when the dish is declined.

All these little rocial laws are simple tainly, men do not.

The vivid girl rarely attracts confidences. It is not that she is not trusted. But she gives, often unconsciously, the impression that she is full of herself. The quiet woman, however, has no personality which obtrudes itself, and it is easier to take one's troubles to her.

All these little rocial laws are based upon one great principle—unselfish consideration for others. When we accept an invitation, we accept all that it includes, and we do everything to show appreciation of the entertainment provided for us. Our hosts may not know our special likes and dislikes an tocd, but they have tried to anticipate our probable in aweek's inaweek's have tried to anticipate our probable inaweek's tastes, and it is not for us to show time in

Problèms That Perplex Answered by BEATRICE FAIRFAX

Does She Care? Dear Miss Fairfax: I have been

I am in constant doubt as to whether our marriage will be successful for the following reasons: He has an uncontrollable temper, does not spend money lavishly and admits that he is not the type who vill pet his wife after marriage. On the other hand, he possesses amoition, and does not drink nor play

I admit that I also possess a temually quareling.

Many times the idea of separating with him has entered my mind, but could I become accustomed to another after having been in his comsake of ambition, does it pay run-ning this great risk of marrying him? ANXIOUS.

How much love have you for the man you analyze so carefully? If you care for him deeply, understand and share his ambitions and want to help him make a success of his life and yours, can't you by patience and sweetness help him in the struggle to control his temper? The fact that the man is honest and doesn't pretend that he is a "great lover" is at least a point in his favor. It may be that your critical faculty freezes him. Of course if he is a stubborn, opinionated man, who considers him-self all important and makes no effort to meet you half way on any score, the risk is too great. But in the final analysis it is the depth and tenderness of your feeling and your willingness to help him be his best self which counts.
