What's What By HELEN DECIE

Shopping early in December has every advantage in its favor. The stocks are still undepleted; deliveries are certain and prompt. Charge customers especially have no excuse for delay, since bills for purchases made now will not be sent until January. Nowadays, only neighbor-hood shops are "open evenings" during the Christmas gift season; the vast bulk of Christmas merchandise is transferred in the daylight hours, and the overworked sales clerks have at least their evenings to themselves. Still, there is much room for im-

"Shop before noon" is the wisest of slogans now. In the morning hours the selling force and the buying throng are unwearied. Many women do a lot of postponable household work in the forenoon and then go downtown in the afternoon utterly fatigued, with judgment and temper below par. The woman be-hind the counter has been on her feet all day, her brain and hands busied with a hundred commercial transactions. It is not fair to her to come otherwise than in a cheerful mood—the mood of the fresh morning, when nerves and temper and consequent efficiency are at their best—on both sides of the counter.
