

Golden Rule Is Urged Between Farm and City

Will Bring Better Understanding for Solution of Their Problems, J. D. Larson Tells Farmers' Congress.

Strict application of the principle of the "Golden Rule" as the best means of bringing about a better understanding between business men in the cities and agriculturists in the surrounding country as a solution of their problems was urged before the Nebraska Farmers' Congress here last night by J. David Larson, commissioner for the Omaha Chamber of Commerce.

"Most of the trouble in the world," he asserted, "comes from misunderstanding. The sooner, therefore, that there is closer affiliation between the business men and their partners in the country, the sooner will there be an adjustment of economical disturbances."

Reviews Problems. Mr. Larson reviewed the problems that are facing the farmers of the nation and declared: "If there is one thing we need more than another in the city and country it is to get our feet on the ground and get back to the Golden Rule. Individualism is only successful when it considers the rights of others. The interests of the city and country are so intertwined that the failure of one reflects on the other."

"Cities are only substantial and built on a firm foundation when surrounding country is producing and developing. City builders have come to a very definite conclusion that the safest way to build a good city is to develop the country surrounding. Business does not prosper unless the farmers prosper. Their interests are identical; thus, anything that can be done to make them understand each other better is a step forward."

Arguments Useless. "There are difficult problems confronting the farmers at this time. The business men also have difficult problems and they must be solved in the interest of both. Both are involved in the economic solution and one cannot be adjusted without the other. Hot headed arguments or accusations on either side are useless."

Establishes Bureau. "The Omaha Chamber of Commerce, realizing the importance of a closer relationship between city and country, has established an agricultural bureau with a practical farmer in charge, which has for its purpose the creating of friendly relations between the city and country and assisting the farmer in solving some of his difficulties. Some headway is being made. It is a department of co-operation working to the end that some day both city and country will realize that their interests are identical and can be solved by co-operation and the practice of the Golden Rule."

Vital Problems of Farmer Are Topics for Meet Here

Members of Farmers' Congress, Which Opened in Omaha Last Night, Find Means for Meeting Critical Conditions Facing Agriculturists; Finance Is Leading Question.

The twelfth annual session of the Nebraska Farmers' Congress convened in the Hotel Rome last night for a three-day session during which an attempt will be made to solve what members of the organization say, are the most vital problems ever faced by farmers.

Will Be Open Meet. More than 300 farmers are expected to attend the three-day session. The meeting last night was opened with an invocation by the Rev. Howard Whitcomb of the Calvary Baptist church.

Facing Crisis. "Secretary of Agriculture Meredith told the National Farm Bureau federation meeting in Indianapolis last week that the farmer must have reasonable prospect for a fair return for his labor and use of capital," said Manager McIntosh, in discussing his views on the congress meeting here.
