Weekly Food Index.

Weekly Food Index.

As an example of the steadying influences perceptible in prices, it might be noted that for the first time in months, the number of articles advancing in price this week exceeds those declining.

This week's food index number, based on the prices per pound of 31 articles used for food, is $3.42, which compares with $3.42 last week and $5.19 for the week ending January 15, 1920. This week's number is unchanged from last week, but shows a loss of $2.1 per cent from the like week of last year. Of the 80 commodities quoted, 20 advanced as compared with last week 16 declined and 44 remained unchanged, as follows:

Financial

New York, Jan. 16.-The state-ment of the whole reserve system is of a character which will insure continuance of the interesting conflict of influences for and against a further decline in money rates. At the close of last week the system's precentage of cash reserve to deposits and note circulation was the highest since October of 1919. Last week's $157,000,000 reduction of rediscounts brought that account to the lowest since last March and oans on United States government collateral are now below any week since the statement of them separa-tely was begun in March of 1918.
