By SAM HELLMAN.

Everything comes to him who waits-even the waiter. But to her who waits come nothing but wrinkles and a growing fondness for cats, canary birds and patch quilt. This is a man's world and the female of the species has to go after anything she wants.

Mary Hollis had waited so long that she was already beginning to talk about the things that happened when she was a young girl. Jim Booth, who worked in another department of the Peerless department store had also waited a long time. Six years before, when he and Mary had gone to their first picture show, Jim had felt a tug at his heart. Next payday he looked at his envelope and felt a tug at his head. Two can't live as cheap as one when the one is hardly making a living.
So for six years jim had waited and Mary had waited. Not a word of love had been spoken between them. Wrinkles were creeping in under Jim's eyes and and Mary' her forehead. A search revealed they used to be. One day Mary looked in the mirror and saw a white hair loose over her forehead. A earch revealed others. That evening when lim as usual met her at the store door to walk home with her Mary said:

"Jim, we are both getting old. Do you know that?"

"I know you would ask me to marry you if you had the money, and I would marry you. Let's be frank. We would have married six years ago if you'd been able to, wouldn't we have?

"Yes, Mary," and there was a weary helplessness in Jim's voice.

"I'll never love any woman but you, and that is why I wouldn't have you "I know that, Jim," replied Mary softly, "but what shall we do?" "What is there to do?"

There was a silence for a few blocks.
"Jim," said Mary suddenly, "one of us must leave the store and leave the store and leave of us is making you every day there would be nothing left for me."

"Yes, I know. It would be as gray hairs and winkies. I am get-ting so old, and so are you."

"The gray hair makes you look prettier," said Jim weakly. Mary smiled sadly.
"Mary," suddenly said Jim, "you are not getting tired of me, are "No, yes, perhaps I am," and she looked away from him. The rest of the walk was completed in gloomy silence The next evening when Jim ap-peared at the door there was no

Mary. "She quit," Booth was told at the store the next morning.
"She said she was going out of town," the woman at the boarding house told him that evening A week later Jim received a letter from Mary. She had gone back to her home town upstate.

"I'm tired of working, Jim," was the closing sentence of the letter.

"An old friend of mine is willing to marry me. He is a good man and I like him very much. I will always pray for your success and happiness." "I'm coming on the next train," wired Jim. "For God's sake, wait."

Mary was at the station.
"Why did you come, Jim? It will only make you unhappy. I told you about Mr. Gordon, didn't 1?" "I don't care," cried Jim. "You can't marry anyone but me. I have loved you every minute for six years and you love me."

"But, Jim, how can we?"
"Damn it. Money isn't everything. Other people do it on less than we have. Be a sport, dear. Let's get married now, right now. I don't want to wait another second. Will you, dear?"
"Jim," cried Mary, throwing her arms about him. "Why didn't you say that long ago? I've been waiting for those words for six years. Oh,

Jim, I know we will get along fine, "How about Gordon?" interrupted "Oh, Gordon," laughed Mary happily. "He's the justice of the peace here. He's been willing to marry me for a long time, provided I could get a man and a license. Let's let him do it today." Bishop Stuntz Tells Ad-Sell League How To Get Foreign Trade

Bishop Homer C. Stuntz of the Methodist Episcopal church gave an address on "World Conditions" at the meeting of the Ad-Selling league at the Fontenelle hotel last night. Bishop Stuntz, during the past 40 years, has been assigned to important posts abroad and has gained a comprehensive knowledge of world affairs. / His talk concerned princically the export trade of this coun-Bishop Stuntz said that the greatest way of building up our foreign trade relations was to export Americans and let them show the other countries what America has, and thus create the demand for American R. Beecher Howell, gener manager of the Metropolitan Water District of Omaha, spoke on "Plan-ning for Tomorrow." He enumerated some of the accomplishments of the Water board, and went on to say that there was available in the Platte river some 90,000 horse power for use electrically, if it were har-nessed. He advocated municipal ownership and development of this power by the city of Omaha.

Seeks Divorce After 35

· Years of Life in Wedlock Augusta Anderson, 65, and Nels Anderson, 67, were married when Grover Cleveland was president the first time, in 1885. Today Mrs. Auderson's suit for divorce will be heard in district court. She alleges Mr. Anderson paid too much attentiton to younger women than she.
