Fine Arts

This new song book belongs to Margie Meyer. "Listen little book, why I tell you, if anyone wishes to carry you away, say, 'Let me be in peace, I belong to Margie Meyer.'"

This is a translation from a book plate on exhibit by the Fine Arts society at the library. The exhibit opened Wednesday, January 19, and will close January 30.

Beneath the above verse and a design which was done by hand with berry juices, are the words in Margie's own handwriting, "Written the thirtieth of October in the year of our Lord Jesus Christ, 1812."

A product of the Pennsylvania Dutch for which the plate was made, said Maurice Block, art director, in speculating on the attractive piece of work, "was probably the only book Margie Meyer had. No doubt it meant everything in the world to her."

"Did she leave it at the church?" asked some one. "I think not," laughed Mr. Block. "She probably slept with it under her pillow."

This is only one plate of the hundreds on exhibit at the library. There may be seen there a collection of early English and Canadian plates, belonging to Emery Wilson of Omaha, an exhibit from the American society of book plate artists (most of them made in 1919), personal collections of Mr. Gould Dietz, Mrs. Myron Learned, Mrs. M. G. Colpetzer, Margaret Baum and Mrs. S. S. Caldwell.

Dr. Alfred J. Brown of Omaha has loaned the Fine Arts society his collection, to the apparent joy of connoisseurs. Many of his book plates were done by Edwin Davis French, an American; some were done by Dr. Brown himself. Dr. Brown designed a plate for Dr. Le Roy Crummer of our own city, and a beautiful one for the University of Nebraska.

A copy of the earliest known book plate may be seen in this interesting collection. It was done in 1470 by Dr. Hildebrand Brandeburg. This, too, is part of Dr. Brown's collection.

Among the Omaha women engaged in arranging the exhibit Wednesday morning were Mrs. Charles Wilhelm, chairman of exhibits for the Fine Arts society; Mrs. E. B. Manchester and Margaret Greer Baum.

Her Dressing Table. An interesting impromptu dressing table was established by one woman when she determined to use an old-fashioned funnel-shaped work table. In the funnel she kept her brushes and combs. Hairpins and other articles went into the cotton and silk compartments, all of which were compactly shut up by the table top the moment she finished dressing. The sole previous use of this despised table, relic of a stuffy horsehair age, was to support an unhappy looking fern.

It was a business girl who originally adapted a typewriting table as a dressing table. The idea has been improved upon by furniture designers, for the most modern of such tables possess sliding tops and disappearing receptacles for brushes, combs and bottles.

Does your husband (or your wife) wear a martyr's crown? Playing the martyr is a favorite game with husbands and wives. Both can't play it at once so the one who does it first achieves an unfair advantage. The results are various; sometimes happy but most frequently disastrous. Andy and Corinna had been married eleven months — and then the game started. How it was played is told by Dana Gatlin in "The Martyr's Crown" — a story for married people or those about to be married. It contains a message, a promise, and a solemn warning. Read it in GOOD HOUSEKEEPING for February. On sale now — at all newsstands. ERIC NELSON, Distributor 1618 Capitol Ave. Douglas 6134
